DR. C. McLANE'S Celebrated Liver Pills

In offering to the public Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills as a remedy for Liver and Bilious Complaints we present no apology will be needed. The great prevalence of Liver Complaint and Bilious Diseases of all kinds throughout the United States, and particularly in the West and South, where, in the majority of cases, the patient is not within the reach of a regular physician, requires that some remedy should be provided that would not in the least impair the constitution and yet be safe and effectual. That such is the character of Dr. C. McLane's Liver Pills, there can be no doubt. The great success which has invariably attended their use, will we think, be sufficient to convince the most incredulous. It has been our sincere wish that these Pills should be fairly tested and stand or fall by the effects produced. That they have been so tested and that the result has been in every respect favorable, we call tens of thousands to witness who have experienced their beneficial effects.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS are not held forth or recommended, (like most of the popular medicines of the day), as universal cure-alls, but simply as a specific for Liver Complaints, and those symptoms connected with a deranged state of that organ.

THE ONLY GENUINE McLANE'S PILLS, Are the Dr. C. McLane's Liver Pills, PREPARED BY FLEMING BROS., Pittsburgh, Pa.

McCaffrey Defeats Mitchell in the Glove Contest.

ITEMS FROM VARIOUS POINTS

President Harris and Vice President Oakes Interviewed—Two Brothers Fight a Terrible Duel with Knives.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Over 6000 people assembled in Madison square garden to-night, to witness the glove contest between Charles Mitchell of England and Dominick McCaffrey of Pittsburg. At 10:08 McCaffrey entered the ring in the garden, quickly followed by Mitchell. Both men looked in trim condition, and each scaled 155 pounds. Mitchell is 23 years old, and stands [illegible] feet 8½ inches high. McCaffrey is 21 years old, and stands 5 feet 9½ inches. Mitchell was attended by Billy Madden and Alfred Luntz. McCaffrey by Billy Edwards and Tom Campbell. B. McCormick, of the Cincinnati Enquirer, was referee, and Ed. Plummer timekeeper. The fight was under the marquis of Queensbury rules.

No time was lost in preliminaries, and the men were quickly called to the scratch.

Round 1—Mitchell was confident and McCaffrey smiling, but both were cautious. McCaffrey finally let fly his right, catching Mitchell on the breast, but a little short for the effect desired. Mitchell became cautious and then delivered a vicious left-hander on the body, followed with efforts at in-fighting, which ended in a clinch, when McCaffrey got in a swinging right-hander, and the round ended in McCaffrey's favor, amid great cheering.

SECOND ROUND.

Mitchell opened the round with several terrible body blows and was seemingly determined to force the fighting. McCaffrey took his gruel, getting in, meanwhile, good ones on Mitchell's face and head. Cautious sparring on both sides succeeded, when suddenly McCaffrey visited his antagonist on the right ear, and Mitchell seemed to gather himself, however, and delivered his terrible sledge-hammer blows on McCaffrey's chest and neck. McCaffrey was giving as good as he got. Mitchell tried to force his opponent to the ropes, but McCaffrey would not yield and some sharp fighting ensued. When time was called McCaffrey seemed to have had the best of it.

THIRD ROUND.

Both men were considerably blown. McCaffrey appeared confident, and jumped to the middle of the ring. Mitchell, in trying to force the fighting, received a staggering right-hander and blood flowed from a gash over his right eye and from the nose. First blood for McCaffrey was claimed and allowed. McCaffrey now seemed to have things his own way. Mitchell in his efforts to get in his telling body blows was losing his defense, and McCaffrey never once missed his chance. Mitchell began to get angry and endeavored again to beat McCaffrey to the ropes, despite repeated warnings by the referee, who finally had to step into the ring and lead the men to their corners. The excitement now was intense. The crowd shouted and yelled like madmen, McCaffrey plainly being the favorite. The garden was a bedlam when time was called.

FOURTH ROUND—McCAFFREY WINS.

Mitchell looked much the worse for wear and his face had considerable blood on it. Still he went at it gamely. In a moment McCaffrey led with his left, but was neatly stopped, and Mitchell sent back a hard one on Mac's body. Both men clinched and some rapid exchanges followed. McCaffrey's work was most telling, and Mitchell resorted to his old tactics of bearing on his opponent. McCaffrey was clever in keeping away, always doing good work with that right hand and not forgetting his left.

During the clinch that followed Police Captain Williams stepped on the stage, and putting his club between the men, ordered the fight stopped. The referee called time at this juncture, and a wild scene succeeded. Everybody yelled, and nothing could be understood. The referee tried to make himself heard, but in vain. He stood at the ropes with the backers of the men on either side vainly trying to induce him to do something. Whether it was to reserve his decision, call the match a draw or order another round, could only be surmised. At any rate, when McCormick could make himself heard, he announced his decision—McCaffrey had won the match and all the gate money. This made the crowd crazy again, and they cheered for McCaffrey and the referee.

REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR OF NEW MEXICO.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—In his report to the secretary of the interior upon the condition of affairs in New Mexico the past year Governor Sheldon says: The territory has prospered materially in all its industries. Stock raising has received a greater impetus than any other interest, the number of cattle and sheep being estimated at 2,000,000 head. The report states that there is an irrepressible conflict [illegible] between cattle and sheep [illegible] which may result in the [illegible] future [illegible] the destruction of the sheep [illegible]. The trouble is attributed to the destruction of pastures by sheep [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of ranches, and requiring the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] during the year $[illegible]. It is asserted that unless [illegible] laws [illegible] passed allowing individuals to acquire large amounts of land [illegible] [illegible] stock raising industry will be developed to the highest attainable point. Seven-eighths of the public land in New Mexico, says Governor Sheldon, will in all probability, never become the property of citizens, as it is difficult to comply with the requirements of the present land laws on account of the absence of water. The failure to settle the status of Spanish and Mexican grants has retarded the progress of the territory. The production of gold and silver has reached a point sufficient, in the opinion of the governor, to justify the establishment of a United States mint in the territory.

NEW YORK NOTES.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—[Special.]—The weather continues warm. The highest the thermometer registered yesterday was 7[illegible].

Yesterday was the first Sunday on which the elevated railroads carried passengers all day at five cents. There seemed to be no visible increase of traffic. It was hardly a fair test, as the day was showery in the forenoon. The surface railroads were unaffected.

Moody and Sankey held services in the Brooklyn Academy of Music yesterday. The meetings were crowded.

WANTS HIS MONEY.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1[illegible].—Artemus H. Holmes, a lawyer, has brought suit against ex-Senator Jerome B. Chaffee and David H. Moffatt, alleging that he had invested $1[illegible],000 for 650 shares of stock in the Little Pittsburg Mining Company in 1879 on representation of defendants that there was ore in the mine to the value of $5,[illegible]00,000, which would pay a dividend of $100,000 per month for three years, and that these statements were false. Defendants did not appear, and the judge directed the jury to give a verdict for $1[illegible],000.

GREENWICH ADOPTED AS THE PRIME MERIDIAN.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—The international prime meridian conference, at the meeting to-day, adopted the meridian of Greenwich. The representatives of France and Brazil did not vote, and the representative of San Domingo voted against.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1[illegible].—[Special.]—A closely coiled boy, about 7 years old, arrived yesterday, on the steamer City of Chicago, and was taken in a carriage to the Astor house. In a private room the veil was removed and the face of the Russian dog-faced boy, Jo-Jo, was disclosed to several physicians and reporters, who had been invited to see the curiosity. The [illegible] resembled a Scotch terrier's. He will be exhibited.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—Pacific coast, local rains and partly cloudy weather.

HARRIS AND OAKES INTERVIEWED.

What They Say of the Report of Disaffection Among Portland Merchants.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—In regard to the trouble between merchants of Portland, Oregon, and the Northern Pacific railroad, President Harris said this morning that he had nothing to say on the subject until he communicated with gentlemen of the Portland board of trade with whom he had the interview referred to. "We always have more or less complaint from some one. Every man who does not prosper quite as well as his neighbor takes it into his head that it must be the fault of some one else, and if there is a chance of blaming the railroad he is sure to do so. It is absurd to suppose that I could have guaranteed Portland merchants rates so low as to enable them to compete with New York manufacturers. How could I know whether Portland could compete with New York?"

ANOTHER REPORT.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Your reporter saw President Harris of the Northern Pacific this morning regarding a dispatch to the Tribune, announcing the intention of Portland merchants to boycott the Northern Pacific. He said: "My attention was only called to this statement this morning. The merchants, you will notice, put their grievances in the form of special charges, and my duty seems to be to deal with the merchants, and not with the press."

"Vice President Oakes denies the truth of these statements," said the reporter. "Shall I report you as confirming his denial?"

"No sir, I make no statement whatever."

Several California merchants, whom your reporter afterwards visited, seemed of the opinion that the Portland merchants could not very well do without the Northern Pacific railroad, that the latter road would control the freight movement from other places around Portland, and that the Union Pacific has not the facilities for carrying freight which the Northern Pacific possesses.

OAKES INTERVIEWED.

(Special.) Vice President Oakes denies that Portland merchants as a body, have cause of complaint against the Northern Pacific, and says the interests of the Northern Pacific and Portland are identical, and cannot be disturbed by a few dissatisfied merchants. He has advices that there is no real foundation for the alleged boycotting movement.

CRIMINAL CALENDAR.

TERRIBLE DUEL FOUGHT BY BROTHERS.

NORWICH, Oct. 1[illegible].—[Special.]—Andrew and Joseph Squires, brothers, fought a duel with jackknives yesterday at Falls Mill, Conn. Joseph was killed. Both men were skilled in the handling of knives, and backward and forward the men pressed each other, deftly aiming and warding murderous blows. Before the fight terminated Joseph, who was a cripple, received three gaping wounds in the breast, one in the shoulder, one across the arm, and several in the back of the head, and a long, fatal cut that extended from the back of the ear across the jugular vein. In his death agony he struggled out of the bandoon, in an effort to get away from his murderer, but Andrew wound one arm around his victim's body, repeatedly plunging his knife into his brother's head as he was dragged along. The cause was whisky and an old feud.

ATTEMPT TO WRECK A TRAIN.

TOPEKA, K., Oct. 1[illegible].—A second attempt to wreck the Santa Fe express train was made a short distance east of Florence, Kansas, Sunday evening. The section men of that division went to Florence during the day, and returned on a hand car to their homes about [illegible] o'clock, when they discovered a tie across the tracks, fastened down and succeeded in moving it before the arrival of the east bound express, due there at 9:15. The section men saw four men retreating from under a bridge near by, after the train had passed, making rapid progress towards the woods, where they probably had horses hitched. Sunday night previous an obstruction was placed for the passenger train near Emporia, and resulted in wrecking a freight train and killing the fireman. It is believed this is the same gang, and that robbery is their object. A reward of $500 was offered for the arrest of the perpetrators of the deed a week ago.

A DASK YOUTH'S CRIME.

LANCASTER, Oct. 1[illegible].—Lawrence Clark, of Philadelphia, aged 1[illegible], this morning shot Miss [illegible] Ferson, aged 1[illegible], in this city and then shot himself fatally. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Their board bill was also paid up to that time. More arrests are expected to-night, and United States Commissioner Harper will probably remain to hear cases all night.

MYSTERIOUS DOUBLE MURDER.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 13.—John Lowry and wife, cattle feeders for C. D. Hudson, were found murdered on a farm near Marshall, Missouri, this evening. Lowry was found at the barn, with a bullet hole in his head, and his wife near the house, her skull having been crushed with an axe. The crime is a mystery, though it is suspected it was committed by a party of tramps seen in the vicinity.

THE FIRE RECORD.

THE BURNING MINES IN OHIO.

COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 1[illegible].—There is no change of consequence in the situation in the valley to-day. The mine at San Rum, which was burning, has been unlocked and closed, with hopes of smothering the fire. At Straitsville mines are still afire, and engines have been called from Logan, Lancaster and Columbus. They commenced operations with engines and began at 10 o'clock this morning, and expected to give some effect to the blaze before night. Latest Advices from the Seat of War in China.

REVIEW OF THE GRAIN TRADE

Brigands Make a Rich Haul in Turkey—Colonel Stewart Believed to be Alive—Riot in England.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—The correspondent of the Times telegraphs that the news of the defeat of Admiral Lespes and the French fleet at Tamsui is confirmed. The Chinese, by hiding in the brush wood, suffered some 600 of the French force to land and come within easy range of their guns, before they appeared. The Chinese general Tso then led an attack upon the rear of the French, and the troops became panic stricken. The Chinese killed seventy men and captured [illegible] gun. They also beheaded twenty-two French corpses, but desisted from that horrible work upon protest of the British consul. The Chinese loss was 200 killed and wounded. The fighting lasted five hours, at the end of which time the French retired to the ships.

DETAILS OF THE RECENT ENGAGEMENT.

PARIS, 13.—General de Lisle telegraphs that the wound General Negrier received in the engagement is so painful that it is necessary that the other should rest, and that therefore he should join his column. He continues, "In the last engagement the Chinese lost 1000 men, including their generals. Our victory is mainly due to the gallantry of the vanguard."

AMERICA'S INTERVENTION NOT ASKED.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—There is good authority for the statement that the government of the United States has not been asked to mediate in Franco-Chinese affairs, by either of the disputants, and therefore it has not, conditionally or otherwise, refused to do so, as stated in a Paris dispatch to-day.

REINFORCEMENT URGED.

PARIS, Oct. 13.—Le Paris urges upon the government the necessity of reinforcement of Admiral Courbet at Kelung and General Delisle in Tonquin, in order to place them in a position to strike a final blow at China.

ENGLAND.

MARK LANE REVIEW.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—The Mark Lane Express in its weekly review of the corn trade, says: The weather is stormy and unusually cold. The rainfall has improved the seed beds for the crop of 1885, but has prevented threshing, thus lessening farmers' deliveries and enabling sellers to maintain their rates. Sales of English wheat the past week were 7[illegible],868 quarters, at 32s 2d against 71,060 quarters at 40s 9d the corresponding week last year. The trade in foreign wheat is slow. [illegible] [illegible] stocks have increased [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] owing to [illegible] action of American and Russian [illegible] [illegible]. Cargoes off coast are not improved. There were seven arrivals, three cargoes were withdrawn, three were sold, including one of No. 1 California at 35s, and four remained, including two American. Fifteen cargoes are overdue. Wheat on passage is dull, as prices are in buyers' views. Flour is quiet and steady, the increase in imports checks trade. Maize is scarce and higher. Barley is steady. Oats are firm, and 3d higher.

DISGRACEFUL RIOT AT A POLITICAL MEETING.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—The conservative demonstration announced for Birmingham to-day, involving meetings in Ashton grounds, town hall and in skating rinks, was prevented by organized force. Their opponents, the liberals, in great numbers forced an entrance to the town hall, by battering in the doors with heavy planks, and overwhelmed the conservatives. A free fight took place, in which furniture was broken and freely used for weapons. The mob swept from the platform the officers of the meeting and the speakers. Sir Stafford Northcote and Lord Randolph Churchill endeavored to address the people present, but their efforts were ineffectual, and they were obliged to retire to a side room, where they made short addresses to a small party, the mob endeavoring to prevent the speakers being heard. In speeches in the inside room the speakers denounced and condemned the action of the liberals.

HERBERT BISMARCK.

LONDON, Oct. 1[illegible].—A Paris correspondent says it is reported that Herbert Bismarck will not continue his position at The Hague on probation, and that Bismarck will ultimately appoint Herbert vice chancellor to relieve his father of much of his foreign duties.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1[illegible].—[Special.]—A cable [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. The Turkish mail [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] nightfall [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. The escort fought hard but [illegible] was taken in [illegible] [illegible] horses were shot down by the brigands, who were in ambush and evidently knew well the [illegible] [illegible] the mail [illegible] was captured. One [illegible] rider was killed and several others were seriously wounded. The brigands made a good haul. The government's loss alone is believed to be £60,000 in remittances and tithes. Private losses are about £1,000. One mail rider succeeded in escaping, and carried the news to Islamd. The sultan was much exasperated at such an occurrence so near to Constantinople, and issued orders immediately to dispatch a body of cavalry in pursuit, and if necessary cross to Asia Minor. Three hundred troopers left for Ismid, but as yet there have been no captures. The attack was so well planned that the existence of collusion between government officials and brigands is strongly suspected. The pursuing party found dead horses and mules on the scene of the struggle, but no human bodies.

THE SOUDAN.

COLONEL STEWART BELIEVED TO BE ALIVE.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—The government, through Colonel Kitchener, has received news from Debbeh which, if correct, proves that Colonel Stewart is alive. The messenger who returned to Colonel Kitchener at Wady Halfa on Friday, says the steamer that ran upon the rocks at Wady Gorna, the crew of which was massacred by Arabs, was commanded by M. Nicola, the Greek consul. It is believed that if Colonel Stewart had been on board he would have been in command.

LATEST FROM CAIRO.

CAIRO, Oct. 13.—The mudir of Dongola has ordered mounted irregulars to prepare to march to the front Thursday. Infantry will protect the city in the event of El Mahdi's forces attacking. Troops are reluctant to advance, fearing they will have to encounter serious fighting. They also appear disaffected upon circulation of the reports that the sultan desires their services to oppose the English.

NEWS FROM CHINA AND JAPAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—The Oceanic to-day brings Hong Kong dates of September 13, and Yokohama of the 27th, to the associated press. Yokohama advices state that Charles De Groote, Belgian minister to Japan, died suddenly of heart disease September 16. The French Catholic mission refused to bury him, because he was a Mason.

On the 15th of September Yokohama and Tokio were visited by a terrible typhoon. In the latter city 3000 houses were wholly or partially destroyed, and twenty persons killed. The loss of life at sea is appalling, and no estimate could be made of the number. The typhoon was followed by another of great force on the 17th, but of brief duration.

It is believed the Franco-Chinese war will not interfere with the revision of the Japanese treaty. A conference will be opened as soon as the foreign ministers have received their instructions. It is believed a basis of revision is already agreed upon, and that only minor details remain to be discussed.

Hong Kong advices state that it is rumored that the Chinese government had concluded a loan of 2,000,000 taels with a German banking firm, and half a million had been paid into the Canton treasury on account.

LANGTRY TO BE DIVORCED.

[Special.]—It is certainly known that Mrs. Langtry and Freddie Gebhard desire to marry. The only obstacle in the way is the difficulty of securing a divorce from Mr. Langtry, who has for years declined to allow the matter to go before the courts, unless he should appear as the plaintiff. He has now determined on marriage again himself, and will allow Mrs. L. to secure a decree by default. Mrs. Langtry is undecided whether to apply for divorce in England, the United States or Holland.

BEFORE THE BATTLE.

The Great Question, "How will Ohio Vote To-day?"

BOTH SIDES CLAIM THE STATE

Too Many Unknown Quantities Involved to Render Prediction Certain—Blaine says Talk is Unnecessary.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—[Special.]—The Inter Ocean's Cincinnati special says: Nobody is betting on the election. Once in a while some one bluffs, but betting is quiet. Another thing, money is scarce, and men who have money do not care to risk it on the contingencies of an Ohio election. The most ardent partisans hesitate to assert an opinion on the result, and those of the coolest judgment are loth to express an opinion.

One of the contingencies is fair weather, which means a full vote, and is an important factor in an Ohio election. If the weather should be fair the world will hear of the biggest vote in Ohio ever polled in the history of that State. It should poll 800,000 votes this fall.

Another contingency is how the young men will cast their maiden votes. About twenty-five thousand "first-in-his-life" votes will be cast by as many young men at this fall election. "How will the young men vote?" That is the question everywhere in the State. The republicans have made the greatest noise during the canvass and, as to whatever there may be in the vocal and martial music that goes toward influencing young men in their first choice, the republicans have had the advantage.

THE GERMAN VOTE.

The German vote was a perplexing question last year and to this day no man can tell how much wool in central Ohio, how much wine along the lake shore, and how much beer in the cities had to do with the election of Hoadly. The governor himself attributed his election to wool and wine. He had been an attorney for the liquor dealers, and no doubt he got a pretty large vote from them. This may account for his 12,000 plurality, while some others on his ticket, the lieutenant governor notably, got majorities of only about 5000. The liquor question was up last year in the shape of a vote for a prohibition amendment to the constitution, but with all that there was doubt in the minds of leading politicians whether the liquor question entered into the election of the successful candidates as an appreciable factor. Then there were to be elected several judges of the supreme court last year, and this is supposed to have naturally enlisted the liquor dealers in favor of the democratic candidates for the offices. Besides all these circumstances surrounding the campaign last year there was the additional fact of large contributions by brewers and saloon keepers, which by the way, they did not give to the democratic executive committee, but expended through a committee of their own. Last year the liquor interest was united and now,—this year there is discord in their ranks. In September the Scott law committee quarreled, and again on the 4th of September. On the 8th of October a little speck of war broke out among the brewers of Cincinnati. In both cases it was a disagreement as to whether they should recommend their brethren to vote for one only or for two democratic candidates for state officers. But again there must be taken into calculation the fact that the saloon dealers are bringing missionaries from Iowa and Kansas, to go, in colporteur style, from house to house and tell how prohibition works. In addition to these they have employed public speakers from prohibition states to speak in large cities, while they are using the mails to send out circulars. They are by no means using them to the extent that they did last year for this purpose. It should be considered in this connection the fact that in Hamilton county last year the vote for Hoadly showed a loss of 7,000, and a loss of 7000 in Cuyahoga county in comparison with the vote for secretary of state two years ago.

[illegible] TELLS THE TALE.

The problem is an intricate one, and only the election on Tuesday can fully solve it, although the republicans are flattering themselves that the German defection has spent its force and will scarcely be felt this year with wool and wine as factors in the coming election. Last year they were supposed to vote strongly democratic in their resentment against the action of the republican congress in letting down the tariff adverse to their interests, but this year the republicans are filling those regions of the state as they are the mining regions with speakers who hold up the tariff. What the effect will [illegible]

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] succeeded. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] felt enough to help and to hurt.

TO PREVENT FRAUDS.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 13.—A citizens' meeting was held to-day, consisting of a joint committee appointed by Cleveland and Hendricks clubs and by the republican executive committee to take some action to prevent illegal voting to-morrow. A large conference was held at the conclusion of which it was decided to appoint four citizens, two of each party, for each precinct in the city. It is learned that similar meetings were held in other cities and committees appointed who will be at the polls all day, designated by badges, and will have authority to scrutinize everything about the ballot box and the manner in which the election is conducted. The sheriff of this county appointed between thirty and forty deputies this afternoon, to be present at the polls, and the mayor to-night believing the sheriff had interfered with his authority, called a meeting of the police board and secured permission to appoint 100 extra police. About half the number were appointed to-night and the others will be named in the morning.

CONFLICT OF AUTHORITY.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 13.—Late to-night six United States deputy marshals were arrested by the police, and five of them locked up at the Hammond Street station, while the sixth was merely held in suspicion. Two of these men were arrested on [illegible] street, and the other four on [illegible] street. Both places are known as [illegible] [illegible] resorts and the marshals claim they were searching for repeaters. Revolvers were found on all of the party but one, and they were taken to the station and locked up. Shortly after [illegible] o'clock United States Marshal [illegible] Wright appeared at the station, and demanded of the officer in charge the release of all the prisoners, he sent [illegible] [illegible] the weapons and the possession of the warrants which had been taken away from the deputies when arrested. All this was refused.

IN WEST VIRGINIA.

WHEELING, W. Va., Oct. 1[illegible].—[illegible] [illegible] Hopper of Illinois has made a tour of the state and says the fusion between the republicans and the greenbackers is complete, and that everybody is entirely satisfied with the ticket. Blaine's recent tariff speeches have done a great deal of good, especially among miners and workingmen, who are enthusiastic. He says the fusion ticket will be carried by 4000.

In Huntington Saturday night people came in from the surrounding counties to the number of 15,000 and there were over 3000 men in the torchlight procession. At this place Saturday night a club of 200 independents who had resolved to vote for Cleveland hired a band and marched in a body up the street yelling for Blaine. The news spread fast and the streets soon filled, and an all night jollification resulted. Democrats to-day claim the state by [illegible],000, a falling off of 1000 in their estimate since Saturday.

FROM THE "SUN."

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—[Special.]—The Sun says: "Our intelligent Wheeling correspondent foretells that the fusion between Blaine and Butler will carry West Virginia. This would be an unexpected result, yet nobody need be astonished. There has been a great deal of disaffection among democrats there besides, their strength has not been as great as we supposed."

BLAINE'S MOVEMENTS.

He Rests His Cause with the Great Jury of Voters—An Interesting Incident.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 13.—Mr. Blaine left Lancaster a little after 8, for Toledo, via Columbus. Just as he started, the train going down the Hocking valley, carrying Mr. Hendricks the democratic candidate for vice president, arrived at Lancaster. The crowd at the depot cheered Mr. Hendricks when he appeared on the rear platform, and he returned thanks in a very brief speech, in which he said: "If Ohio to-morrow shall support the democratic cause the fight is over; but if Ohio to-morrow shall not do that, then in Indiana and in other states the fight is to the death."

At Columbus Governor Foster, Chairman Ogilvee of the republican state committee, and Ex-Commissioner Dudley boarded Mr. Blaine's car. There was a stop here of over an hour, but the car was left on the outskirts of the city and did not go into the depot at all.

THE JOURNEY TO TOLEDO.

TOLEDO, Oct. 13.—At Prospect, a small station where a brief stop was made, an interesting scene took place. Several hundred people were assembled, who cheered, shouted and waved hats and handkerchiefs when Blaine appeared. While he was bowing acknowledgments two very old men, veteran republicans, who had come to the depot to see him were brought out, and Mr. Blaine jumped down from the platform and went to meet them. One of these was Robert Cratt, born near Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, and said to be 100 years and 59 days old. He was a lieutenant in the last war with Great Britain, and was once in command at Fort Erie. The other was John Jones, a native of Wales, but a resident of this country since 1818. He is now in his 90th year. Both veterans seemed to be well and strong, and Blaine remarked afterward that they had grasped his hand firmly. They both assured him that they expected to see him elected president and he expressed his gratification in meeting them.

When the interview was ended, and Blaine had stepped upon the platform, the people cheered again and clamored for a speech. Blaine said: "I thank you, my friends for your kind reception. This old gentleman with whom I have just been talking was born when the country had but three millions of people. It has now about sixty millions. He was born when we had just escaped from colonial dependence, and he has lived to see this country among the leading nations of the world. If we desire to keep it up let us maintain those principles on which alone a true republic can rest." [Great cheering.]

The next stop was made at Marion. The people there seemed wild with excitement. Blaine spoke a few words of thanks and encouragement.

At Upper Sandusky there was another very enthusiastic crowd and here again the people demanded a speech. Blaine said: "A speech, my friends is quite unnecessary. A speech on political topics is too late. Action is the word now. [Great cheering.] To-morrow Ohio is to pronounce the result of the presidential election. I hope the republicans." [The state are ready for the trial.] [We are ready for it!" We are ready and prolonged cheers.

At [illegible] P. M. the train reached T[oledo] [illegible] and Blaine and party were driven quietly to the hotel. [illegible] to-morrow he goes to Detroit.

FRAUD ANTICIPATED.

Democratic Managers Resort to Despicable Practices in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—[Special.]—Republicans, independents, Butler men and all good citizens of this city have awakened to the fact that the democratic managers in Chicago are preparing plans for illegal voting and are [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The fact was recognized that it was not merely a local issue but that a few majority secured by unfair means here might turn the state over to the democrats, and thereby insure the election of Cleveland.

A MINISTER'S APPEAL.

During service at the Second Baptist church yesterday morning, Dr. Lawrence, pastor, stepped to the front of the platform, and said he had a word to say to the voters of the church. He said a great insult had been put upon all good citizens by the local managers of the polling places by placing them in the haunts of vice, where it would cause a blush of shame to mount to the brow of decent citizens to enter. He understood that prompt action would be taken by all Christian denominations in the city to stigmatize this directory and insult by their local managers and he wanted every member of his church and congregation irrespective of party, to consider that it was as much of their religious duty to turn out and register next Tuesday as it was to attend church. The speaker said that he would do so if he had to pass [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

THE CAMPAIGN IN OREGON.

What Republican Speakers have Done, and what they are going to do

The situation in Oregon at this time—less than three weeks before election—gives evidence of a good degree of activity in the republican ranks Here in Multnomah county the seat of the campaign is left for the two weeks preceding the election, and the necessities of the case will in due time be remembered So we shall yet see several politicians here in Portland Out in the state the work is going forward Senator Dolph, Representative George, Representative-elect Hermann, and Elector Lasure, are all in the Willamette valley at present All of these gentlemen have visited Southern Oregon, and now Messrs Hermann, J C Fullerton and Prof J W Merritt will keep the party interests alive in the extreme south, while in Coos and Curry counties Mr Watson will make a number of speeches. In Clatsop, where a considerable republican gain is certain, the efforts of Elector Thompson will be supplemented by speeches from Hon Rufus Mallory, at Astoria, and others before the close of the campaign In eastern Oregon Hon George H Williams spoke last evening at The Dalles Judge Warren Truitt, republican candidate for elector, has been making speeches in this region east of the mountains for nearly three weeks and this evening Hon J [illegible] begins a tour by a speech at Baker City Colonel George B Curry also begins this evening at [illegible] creek in [illegible] county, a series of speakings that will take him over much of [illegible], Baker and Grant counties Senator Dolph has already been in Eastern Oregon, and Mr George is yet to go there

In all sections of the state there are weekly meetings by clubs, which aggregate many meetings each night, addressed both by local talent and speakers furnished by the state central committee Of these speakers on the committee list there are twenty or more, all volunteers, and their cheerful responses have greatly helped the committee in its efforts to supply all calls upon it from clubs. There is a most willing and spontaneous proffer of campaign speaking, which argues much for the strength of the republican cause and its success in the issue There are many more precincts, and local clubs and committees have much to do that is not made a part of campaign work in the more closely settled states Yet enough has been reported at headquarters to indicate an increased interest in the cause of maintaining the republican party in power in the nation as well as in Oregon

THE PALOUSE COUNTRY

Something About this Year's Crops—The Convenience of the Colfax Railroad

COLFAX, Oct 13

Colfax is doing well considering the hard times Wheat is selling at 53c per bushel oats at [illegible] Barley at [illegible] per pound, and other products in proportion But the large yield and small expenses of production makes these prices after all not as low, or no lower at least, than prices at Portland, and there is considerable activity in business I met the familiar and pleasant face of Conductor Bellinger at Colfax He is engaged in the banking business, being cashier of the First National bank He is now engaged in bringing to completion a new bank building to cost about $10,000 a fire proof building of beauty and convenience

Wheat is coming in and going out of Colfax over the Palouse branch of the O R & N Co's road, at the rate of about sixteen cars every alternate day The road, eighty-eight miles from Palouse junction or the N P R R to Colfax, is in very good condition A caboose is run in and out with each train From the number of passengers going each way it would seem as if a passenger coach would be brought into requisition for the comfort of the traveling public The caboose is, however, a very comfortable car

The Colfax people certainly ought to have a feeling of gratitude to the railroad company for climbing a hill at a grade of ninety feet to the mile and letting their trains down into town at a grade of 100 feet to the mile They are certainly a favored people But they are also a deserving people Twice burned up and now within three years, losing all trace of the fire and replacing the burned buildings with many substantial brick business houses as nearly fire proof as it is possible to make them, is sufficient to challenge the attention of railroad companies and capitalists and being surrounded as it is by a rich agricultural district, the emigrant and settler as well

The country between Palouse and Colfax on [illegible] half the distance is broken, the remainder is good grazing land to Endicott and the whole of the remainder of the distance and is quite fully occupied by settlers All are speaking of the large yield of cereals the present year If the railroad were extended to Moscow and Lewiston it would be taxed for the entire year moving the wheat crop Many farmers have on hand two years' crop awaiting facilities for the transportation from the points named Business men in Colfax estimate the amount of grain thus held up to the hundreds of thousands of bushels B

THE EAST SIDE

STEALING A HOUSE

For the past night or two some enterprising party has been gathering building material from different places in town, and judging from the amount taken the erection of a cheap building is contemplated From Lent & Co's lumber yard on Fifth street, a full load of lumber has been taken, including two 8x8 floor sills 28 feet long One thousand shingles, belonging to Barton & Matthews, have been stolen from a residence being built for them on Twelfth street, near [illegible], and also a quantity the property of J [illegible] from Fifth street, above the lumber yard of Lent & Co Their next step will probably be for doors sash and hardware

A WATCHMAN WAYLAID

[illegible] the railroad watchman at the low depot was waylaid by a tramp [illegible] while [illegible] toward the depot, Saturday night [illegible] got the drop on his man He had [illegible] the tramp from behind [illegible] but his unexpected [illegible] and [illegible] in front of him, [illegible] threatening voice [illegible] Simmons drew the [illegible] as he covered the fellow with a revolver "I am ready for you" [illegible] the latter was not ready and told Simmons to go ahead The latter however, did not do as commanded so readily, preferring to see mischief before him, he edged him toward Albina along the track. Upon reaching a safe distance the would-be highwayman retaliated by shouting back, "I ain't afraid of any —— pistol in the United States," and then emphasized his bravery by increasing his speed to a double-quick But why did Simmons allow him to escape? Was he scared?

TRAMPS.

The city is infested with tramps who beg during the day and sleep in box cars and no one knows where at night. Holladay's addition is particularly blessed in this respect, and complaints are frequent from that district Besides their unwelcome visits during the day, it is said night is made hideous by their drunken orgies at the deserted Chinese camp near the lower depot, which they use as a rendezvous According to all reports, they procure pure alcohol and dilute it with water and of this they imbibe until a fair representation of Pandemonium is the result There is some talk of routing the ranch, and it is hoped the project will be carried into effect.

ARRESTED FOR ATTEMPTED MURDER

Jesse Bloodsworth one of the proprietors of the saloon located on the corner of Third and [illegible] streets, was arrested yesterday by the sheriff of Umatilla, on a warrant charging him with shooting at a man in that county, with intent to kill him The sheriff took his prisoner up on the afternoon train.

LEBANON NOTES

LEBANON, Oct 13

Several parties contemplate visiting the Mechanics' fair before it closes

Senator Dolph will address the citizens on the political issues Wednesday evening

Hon M C George remained over Sunday with old friends He speaks confidently of the election of Blaine and Logan

Owing to the rainy evening ex-Governor Whiteaker did not have a very large crowd His principal points were the tariff, Blaine's alleged corruptions, the necessity of a change and the peculiar fitness of Mr Cleveland But little enthusiasm was displayed by the audience

One day last week a little child of Baggage Master Phillips came near having what might have proved a fatal accident It was playing near the second-story window of the parlor of the St Charles hotel and accidentally fell out Fortunately, the landlord, Joseph Nixon happened to be passing along and the child struck him on the back of the neck, causing him to reel and fall While receiving no injury himself he thus saved a serious hurt to the little one

A very flattering demonstration was accorded Hon M C George on Saturday evening His friends and acquaintances gathered in the city hall, and it was well filled He discussed the protective side of the tariff at considerable length and with strong reason The frequent applause given showed that his audience appreciated his effort His reference to the republican candidates at the close was roundly applauded At the conclusion three cheers were given for the standard bearers

PREFERRED STOCK FOR RAILROAD LANDS

LA CENTER, W T, Oct 11

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN

President Harris of the N P R R, in his annual report states the amount of preferred stock of that corporation that had been received in payment for lands of the company Can you inform a small circle of your readers if by the terms of the said preferred stock the holders of the same has any advantage in the location and purchase of lands of the railroad company?

J A H

Under the plan of reorganization of the N P R R, which took effect upon the discharge of the receiver some eight years ago, the lands belonging to the company's grant east of the Missouri river were set aside for the benefit of the holders of preferred stock, and it is for these that preferred stock is taken in payment at par No other advantage is given preferred stock holders either in location or in the selection of lands Preferred stock cannot be used in payments for lands west of the Missouri river

It is estimated that 1,400,000 men are employed in operating the railroads of this country.

CERTAIN MORAL OBSERVATIONS

BAKER CITY, October 8

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN

Last night a young man was burned to death in the city jail It is said that he was drinking freely and became noisy—thereby violating a city ordinance Well, the state licenses people to sell intoxicants The state licenses the city to license people to sell the same The city does so and a man buys it and he becomes crazed by the use of it be it much or little The officer of the city thrusts the "legally" debauched individual in an out-of-the-way lockup in a miserable cell—all alone—at midnight, locked securely in and by some unknown means he is burned to death in the jail He was a foreigner by birth and comparatively a stranger here

Here is a subject for the temperance lecturer, the prohibitionist—yea, the philanthropist Who is responsible for this casualty? The state, the city, the officers, the law or the individual himself? Some extremists argue from one standpoint and some from another, and therefrom adjudge one or the other guilty of a crime If the sale of liquor is to be legalized, ought not the power that does so—for a consideration—also be made to secure the safety of the individual that has been made legally drunk?

There is no use of saying that it so sets from this state of affairs to furnish the proper application of prohibition, for the history of human nature ever since the time of the debauchees of [illegible] shows that there are persons who will through innate desire or habit, or other causes, become intoxicated and the question is still the same as well as society be protected while it is "legal" that he shall be found in this condition?

I have no great desire to moralize on this particularly distressing case All over the civilized world we hear of persons who have been "found dead" in the cells prepared for their reception after arrest for intoxication Some die from criminal neglect—probably most of them No person should be incarcerated in a cold cheerless cell in a state of intoxication without the presence of some one as a guardian, and if the county pay for it the state ought to do so The state protects the will, protected into murder felons from such like justice at its own expense Why not those whose misfortune [illegible] by any cause whatever? Who is responsible for the death of Charles Myers?

It is said there was a riot at Huntington a few days ago A school-house was burned Chinamen were maltreated, and a general riot [illegible] [illegible] It grew out of the [illegible] against the presence of Chinese in that [illegible] It is said that this objection [illegible] [illegible] persons who are there [illegible] in this country and who are allowed [illegible] the fruits of their own labor in the form of plenty and extraordinary amusement [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] to [illegible] Is it not true that [illegible] [illegible] which shield him in greater rights than [illegible] [illegible] hope to enjoy in the [illegible] of their left for the country's good Shall [illegible] democrats [illegible] half a [illegible] now in the penitentiary of this state illegally, whose [illegible] get crime [illegible] himself in [illegible] as flagitious as that attributed to the Huntington rioters When men get angry on account of the presence of Chinamen in this country and allow their frenzy to go so far as to burn school-houses it is high time that the officials should see the laws vindicated We shall all see.

HANS MAKART.

The Life Work and Characteristic of the Great Austrian Painter—His Unlucky Marriages

[illegible]

Hans Makart [illegible] [illegible] Antwerp has just died [illegible] of [illegible] Two weeks ago he was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] well He [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] first came [illegible] worked, [illegible] [illegible] He [illegible] [illegible] outline [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] pictures of his [illegible] [illegible] magnificent studio He [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] is a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] he lay the last [illegible] [illegible] The [illegible] he was seriously attacked by [illegible] He was [illegible] [illegible] inflammation of the brain Last night strong [illegible] [illegible] to send for physicians, [illegible] among them was the celebrated physician Professor Meynert They decided that insanity would be necessary for his recovery, but [illegible] malady suddenly took a fatal turn and he succumbed

A BRILLIANT COLORIST

Last August a cable dispatch announced to the world that Hans Makart the greatest of Austrian painters had become hopelessly insane It was while he was spending the summer in [illegible] Have in mountains that he was taken [illegible] commentators [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Insanity was the inheritance [illegible] his family and his second marriage [illegible] [illegible] which was [illegible] [illegible] wretched, no doubt hastened the [illegible]

Hans Makart was born in Salzburg on the [illegible] day of May 1840 He was a pupil in the studio of Piloty in Munich, and in time he [illegible] to surpass his illustrious master In [illegible] he exhibited his first picture of a sleeping [illegible] [illegible] by a nymph, which from its brilliancy of treatment became the talk of the [illegible] This was followed by "Modern Cupids, [illegible] work of excellence and these two pictures [illegible] the art critics that another great master [illegible] arisen In the following year [illegible] painted "Roman Ruins," and it obtained a prominent place in the [illegible] gallery of the French exhibition. Soon after this success a Hungarian noble paid [illegible] an extravagant price for decorating the walls and ceiling of his dining room He traveled in Italy passing several months in Rome, and from hence went to Egypt While on his travels he collected much material, which he afterward used to great advantage Herr Makart was a fast liver He delighted in the pleasures of the table and was not averse to the exhilaration of the wine cup He burned the candle at both ends, and followed in a short life and merry one

FAVORED BY HIS SOVEREIGN

No artist was ever more popular at court than Makart He was the favorite of his sovereign and his studio was the haunt of rank and fashion It has been said and probably with a trace of truth, that many of those voluptuous and beautiful studies of the nude, for which the artist became famous were painted from life and that his models were ladies occupying a high position in Vienna society While yet a very young man he married a charming young girl [illegible] who was a tender and devoted wife She worshiped him and was the slave of his caprices, which were numerous She had splendid raven hair but when she found [illegible] that Makart doated on locks of a golden red she dyed her own tresses so that she might be more to her husband's taste She was carried off by consumption many years ago, and when she was laid to rest in her coffin half of her hair was golden and the other black, the last half grown during her fatal illness She left two children a boy and a girl

Herr Makart after the death of his wife plunged deeper and deeper into dissipation Her painting a picture and receiving his fee he would give magnificent entertainments. It is recorded that he invited the emperor and the court to a fancy ball of oriental splendor All the costumes were designed by himself and were made of the most costly material It was a triumph of his art

MARRIED MISERY

This [illegible] marriage of Herr Makart was most unhappy In 18[illegible] he fell a victim to the quite mature charms of Mlle [illegible] the premiere danseuse of the Vienna [illegible] He [illegible] [illegible] her [illegible] [illegible] from that [illegible] [illegible] his [illegible] [illegible] The lady was well known in Paris, St. Petersburg and Berlin [illegible] [illegible] of these cities she had admirers [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and dragged her husband's [illegible] [illegible] The contrast between the first and second wife was so striking that it [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] He drank deeply [illegible] [illegible] excesses [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

HIS PAINTINGS

[illegible] [illegible] who worship them [illegible] laughed him to scorn In this [illegible] he has been likened to Wagner [illegible] critics [illegible] "one of those [illegible] painters [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to fruition the desires [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] their [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] their pictures The [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] that the former [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] has given place to a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the "Parts of [illegible]" There is probably [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] that Makart excelled For [illegible] [illegible] gorgeousness of his [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] praise [illegible] [illegible] lacked was conception and drawing Among his other works are The seven [illegible] [illegible] "The [illegible] at Florence" "The [illegible] of [illegible] Man of Pleasure" "Nymphs [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Sleeping Singer [illegible] [illegible] the Bier of Juliet" is at the [illegible] [illegible] His first historical picture [illegible] [illegible] is now at the Berlin [illegible] [illegible] for which it was purchased a [illegible] of $[illegible] Among his other splendid [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] "The Entrance of the Young Emperor [illegible] [illegible] Antwerp and "The Gifts of [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

HANS MAKART.

The Life Work and Characteristics of the Great Austrian Painter—His Unlucky Marriages.

[illegible] Hans Makart, the celebrated [illegible] of Charles V into Antwerp, has just [illegible] after a long agony. Two weeks ago he was apparently well. He drove in the Prater and worked, though only at intervals. At last one [illegible] his outbreak of insanity. He began to tear the paintings and tapestry of his magnificent studio. He would scream, "My head is a box of colors," and then became apathetic. The day before yesterday he lost consciousness. He was most seriously attacked by inflammation of the brain. Last night strong chest cramps obliged him to send for physicians. Among them was the celebrated psychist Professor Meynert. They decided that many weeks would be necessary for his recovery, but the malady suddenly took a fatal turn and he succumbed.

A BRILLIANT COLORIST.

Last August a cable dispatch announced to the world that Hans Makart, the greatest of Austrian painters, had become hopelessly insane. It was while he was spending the summer in the Bavarian mountains that he was stricken, and eminent medical men failed to alleviate his malady. Insanity was the inheritance of his family, and his second marriage, which was inconceivably wretched, no doubt hastened the inevitable end.

Hans Makart was born in Salzburg on the 28th day of May 1840. He was a pupil in the studio of Piloty in Munich, and in time he learned to surpass his illustrious master. In 1866 he exhibited his first picture of a sleeping man embraced by a nymph, which from its brilliancy of treatment became the talk of the town. This was followed by "Modern Cupids," a work of excellence, and these two pictures caused the art critics that another great master had arisen. In the following year he painted "Roman Ruins," and it obtained a prominent place in the picture gallery of the French exhibition. Soon after this success a Hungarian noble paid him an extravagant price for decorating the walls and ceiling of his dining room. He traveled in Italy passing several months in Rome, and from hence he went to Egypt. While on his travels he collected much material, which he afterward used to great advantage. Herr Makart was fast liver. He delighted in the pleasures of the table and was not averse to the exhilaration of the wine-cup. He burned the candle at both ends, and believed in a short life and a merry one.

FAVORED BY HIS SOVEREIGN.

No artist was ever more popular at court than Makart. He won the favor of his sovereign and his studio was the haunt of rank and fashion. It has been said, and probably with a truth of truth, that many of those voluptuous and beautiful studies of the nude for which the artist became famous, were painted from life and that his models were ladies occupying a high position in Vienna society. While yet a very young man he married a charming young girl in Munich who was a tender and devoted wife. She worshipped him and was the slave of his caprices, which were numerous. She had splendid raven hair but when she found out that Makart doated on locks of a golden red she dyed her own tresses so that they might be more to her husband's taste. She was carried off by consumption many years ago and when she was laid to rest in her coffin half of her hair was golden and the other black, the last half it grown during her fatal illness. She left two children, a boy and a girl.

Herr Makart, after the death of his wife, plunged deeper and deeper into dissipation after painting a picture and receiving his fee he would give magnificent entertainments. It is on record that he invited the emperor and the court to a [illegible] ball of oriental splendor. All the costumes were designed by himself and were made of the most costly material. It was the triumph of his life.

MARRIED MISERY.

The second marriage of Herr Makart was most unhappy. In 1882 he fell a victim to the quite mature charms of Mlle Linda, the [illegible] danseuse of the Vienna opera house. He was [illegible] to marry her and from that day [illegible] his downfall dates. The lady was well known in Paris, St. Petersburg and [illegible] in each of those cities she had admirers. The railroads of these six states cost about half as much as all the railroads in the United States.

PRIMA DONNA'S HUSBANDS.

These Male Attachments Generally Cause Domestic Difficulties.

What a Manager Says of These Nuisances—Reminiscences of the Useless Members of an Opera Troupe.

[illegible]

"It may not be generally known," said a well known impresario—one who has grown gray in management—the other day, "that a husband seems to be an indispensable part of a prima donna's outfit. Before I had been a manager long I came to the conclusion that it was utterly impossible for a prima donna to sing without one. The husband is seldom a singer or performer of any kind, but is generally a man who regards his marriage as a profitable business investment which will enable him to live as a gentleman of elegant leisure for the remainder of his days. His chief duty is of course, to draw his wife's salary and give her as small a portion of it as possible. Beyond this all the energies of his being are devoted to making the manager's life utterly and completely miserable. He is the mouth piece or speaking trumpet through which all the demands and dictates of his wife are made known and most of these demands and dictates originate in his teeming brain.

A General Nuisance.

"It is generally stipulated in a prima donna's contract with her manager, that her name shall appear upon all posters and announcements in type of a certain size. If through neglect on the part of the bill writer or the intelligent compositor, her illustrious name should appear in type [illegible] smaller, the first person to discover it after the bills have been posted up is her husband. He says nothing to the manager, but goes straight to the prima donna, inflames her against the wholly innocent and unconscious impressario and instils into her mind such sense of vengeance. Night comes, but the prima donna, for whom a crowded house is waiting, does not. A quarter of an hour before the time for raising the curtain the manager finds that his prima donna has not arrived and he has no one who is up in the principal role of the opera announced for that night to take place. What is to be done? The only thing is for the almost distracted manager to jump into a carriage, seek the prima donna at her hotel and inquire why she has not presented herself at the theatre. Having learned the reason, he must then beg and implore her, almost upon his knees, to save him from impending ruin by not refusing to sing that night. When he has importuned for what the husband thinks a sufficient length of time the prima donna shows signs of relenting, and at length, after the wretched manager has promised to do all sorts of things to atone for the neglect of the bill writer or the intelligent compositor, she consents to sing. The result is that the curtain goes up nearly an hour late.

[illegible] when his wife does not appear the prima donna's husband pervades the whole theatre. He goes behind the scenes, makes love to the chorus girls and tries to stir them up to mutiny against the unhappy impressario. He spends his wife's earnings freely, for you know it ... [illegible] ... the drunk some male member of the cast. He endeavors to find out if any other lady of the company is using his wife's dressing room, and if such is the case he posts off to tell the prima donna, and the consequence is that there is a [illegible] on the following night of the incident already described. He prowls about the front of the house endeavoring to find out the terms of the contract between the manager of the company and the local manager, and if he finds that the year of such a nature as to enable the former to make any money, he forthwith incites the prima donna to demand such an increase of salary as will absorb the full amount of profit. He carries tales to and about the manager and all the members of the company ... [illegible] ... water. Besides the above named methods there are countless other ways in which he contrives to make the manager's life a curse to him, and to cause him to wish that he had never been born. SOME OF THE OTHER HUSBANDS.

Of the husbands of the lesser lights of the opera stage may be mentioned Gilling, who fills that important position for Emma Thursby and is proprietor of the American Exchange in London, where Americans go when abroad to look over the files of American papers. Charles Wetherell an ex-dealer in flour and produce who husbands Emma Abbott and the dollars she makes, and the husband of Abbie Carrington who is a jolly good fellow in the opinion of every one who knows him except the managers who engage his wife.

RUIN FOLLOWING MARRIAGE.

Marriage sometimes proves the ruin of a prima donna. A notable illustration of this was Caroline Richings. What a strange sad history was hers! She was the daughter of a drunken [illegible] Englishman, who was [illegible] ... Peter Richings' English company. Many a time I have seen him knock her off a piano stool with one blow of his fist. The poor girl's sufferings from the cruelty of this brute moved Richings to compassion. He adopted her as his own daughter, and she became Caroline Richings. From that time her star was in the ascendant. She gathered around her a brilliant coterie of artists including the late Edward Seguin and his charming wife, Zelda Seguin, William Castle and his inseparable friend the late S. C. Campbell. Fame and fortune were hers. She was a favorite everywhere and for years had the only English opera company in America. [illegible] hour she married Pierre Bernard, a [illegible] or third rate tenor. From that moment everything went wrong with her. The late [illegible] organized an English opera company and engaged all Miss Richings' best people. The latter was obliged to replace them with [illegible] talent. One season sufficed to bankrupt her, and she went steadily downward till she sank into obscurity and died poor in Richmond, Va.

UP IN A BALLOON.

Perilous Ascension of Fitz John Porter.

President Lincoln was much interested in the account of a perilous balloon ascension by General Fitz-John Porter on April 11, 1862, at Yorktown, Virginia. At five o'clock in the morning he stepped into the car of Professor Lowe's balloon to go up and make a reconnaissance, then to be pulled back to terra firma. He supposed the usual number of ropes were attached to it, whereas there was only one, and a place in this ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ... full length—the length was about nine hundred yards—when suddenly snap went the cord, and upward the balloon. This was on and ... [illegible] ... [illegible]

Up went the balloon higher higher. Its huge form ... [illegible] ... It became a speck in the sky. ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ... He saw Yorktown and its works, York river and its windings and Norfolk and its smoking chimneys. A contrary current of air struck the balloon, and its course was reversed. Here he drifted over the rebellion lines rapidly. He opened the valve, the gas escaped and down he came. He will not say how fast he came down, but it was with a velocity he would not care to have repeated. The car struck the [illegible] of a shelter tent, under which luckily no one happened to be at the time, knocking the tent into pi, and left him enveloped in a mass of collapsed oil silk. He crawled out and found himself in the middle of the camp, not one hundred yards from General McClellan's headquarters.

The average passenger fare charged in 1882 was 2.86 cents per mile. In 1883 it was 2.81 cents.

AMBERGRIS.

A Sick Whale Furnishes a Lump Worth $15,000 — A Mysterious Substance that Sells for $300 per Pound.

[illegible] ... years ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ... held that amber is a [illegible] putrefaction ... part of a whale ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ... A substance called ambergris ... [illegible] ... in the hottest latitudes, in the intestines of the whale. Its history has never been properly explained. Various theories have been advanced but all specialists have contented themselves with quoting some predecessor's words concerning its origin and composition and to-day it affords an ample field for the scientific enthusiast, as it is an extremely valuable commodity, and if the latest appliances were brought to bear upon the subject all unsettled questions undoubtedly could be answered. It was at first supposed to be of vegetable production, or the most part, and analogous or under [illegible] its name is ambergris or gray amber, for its dark gray in color and is formed of concentric layers. It feels like hard rubber. The sailors found it in the whale's intestines or the stomach, and developed the theory that it was a production, and that as a natural course of events the whole whale might turn into the substance. In a short time sailors were multiplying who had seen amber whales.

During the spring of last year the sea Ranger, a whaling ship owned by F. H. Bartlett & Sons of Massachusetts, which had sailed from New Bedford in June, 1879, for a four years whaling voyage in the South Atlantic, took a sperm whale while cruising to the south of St. Helena. After the usual operation of hooking, hoisting and cutting off the blubber and boiling out the ... the most interesting part of the work was begun. At this point all on board eagerly watched while the long spade is pushed into the intestines in order to ascertain if there is any ambergris in the stripped leviathan. In the present instance the men were rewarded by finding the finest specimen of ambergris that has been captured during the last ten years. It was about the size and shape of a watermelon, weighed seventy pounds, and was worth $15,000.

In 1872 his term being at an end, he was compelled to discontinue his enterprise at Baden Baden. He then attempted to obtain concessions for starting gambling houses at Fontarabia, on the Spanish frontier and in the little republic of Andorre, but failed in both attempts. His next speculation was the establishment of the Cercle International at Paris, which, however, was not successful. JIM BECKWOURTH.

The Dwarfish Little Scout who was Known as "The White Chief."

San Francisco Correspondence N. Y. World.

In Plumas county there is a fertile mountain valley in the heart of the Northern Sierras where for some years Beckwourth the famous trapper, guide, Indian chief, and frontiersman lived. The annals of western adventure contain no more interesting figure than was this Jim Beckwourth, the discoverer, in 1844, of this mountain pass. The writer has met many persons, army officers and civilians, who knew Beckwourth, and has talked with gold hunters whom this fearless guide led across the Sierras in 1851.

Beckwourth was born in Fredericksburg, Va., in 1798. His father had been an officer in the revolution. About 1805 the family removed to Missouri and settled twelve miles below St. Charles, in a region still called Beckwourth's settlement. When only nineteen years old Jim Beckwourth became the hunter for Colonel R. M. Johnson's expedition to treat with the Sacs and Foxes, and work lead mines in the Galena region. It was no long before Beckwourth joined General Ashley's Rocky Mountain fur company. From 1817 until he started for California in 1844, his life was a succession of hair-breadth escapes, of adventures and of [illegible] and Indian battles. He served under Bent and Sublette in the West and with General Jessup during the Seminole war in Florida. He even became first counselor of the Crow nation, and finally their head chief, leading them in countless forays against the Sioux and Blackfeet. He always protected the persons and property of whites while he was the ruler of the Crows. His popularity with the tribe, whom he ruled with a rod of iron, was due to his wonderful knowledge of Indian nature and his unsurpassed moss-trooper instincts. He was never so happy as when in the saddle leading a war party by night marches to assault Apache or Comanche encampments, or to stampede their horses and dash away again like a whirlwind. One of the dozen or more Indian names he had meant, in English, "Enemy of Horses."

One of Beckwourth's famous feats was accomplished about 1832, when he was near the Stoker river, trapping beaver. He was pursued by several Indians, and ran all day without food or water, covering, it is believed, not less than ninety-five miles before he reached Sublette's camp. This feat ranks in the tales of the west with Bent's famous ride twenty years later. In 1836, while Beckwourth was in St. Louis and was still chief of the Crows, a foolish trapper told that tribe that he had been killed. They at once surrounded Fort [illegible] with thousands of warriors to take immediate vengeance. After much parley a truce of three months was agreed upon until word could be sent to Beckwourth to come and rescue the beleaguered fort, which contained $100,000 worth of goods. A trapper named Pappen was paid $1000 to deliver the message to Beckwourth and the Crows undertook to await results. The fur company paid Beckwourth $5000 and all expenses to return at once, and he rode with two companions the entire distance in fifty days, and saved the fort from destruction.

After this he traded in New Mexico, and in 1844 led an expedition to California, reaching Los Angeles in January, 1844. He was one of the most active of the revolutionists of 1845, under General Castro being leader of the thirteen Americans who were [illegible] Castro. He was foremost of the subsequent corps of [illegible] which captured the pueblos of Santa Barbara and Monterey, defeating Sutter's forces. When, in 1847, war was declared in Mexico, Beckwourth and his company of trappers, numbering less than a dozen, collected over 1800 horses in the Los Angeles region, and starting, east, ward reached the Arkansas in safety. Beckwourth carried dispatches from Fort Leavenworth to Santa Fe and other places ... [illegible] ... fifteen days. In 1848 he returned to California.

Here he helped to bring to justice the perpetrators of the Reed murders near San Miguel, where a respected English family and their servants, eleven in all, were killed. The ranch was twenty five miles from the nearest house, and Beckwourth was the person who discovered the crime an hour after it was committed. He rode seventy two miles that night, and collected a band of forty men to whom twenty more were added the next day. They separated, and Beckwourth with twenty men overtook the fourteen desperadoes who had killed the family in order to get $1000 worth of gold dust. In the attack two of the murderers were killed ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ... from Hangtown to Shasta.

Beckwourth was rather under medium size but possessed of great strength and endurance. He was famous for his vivid descriptive powers in telling of his adventures. He had in his twelve [illegible] ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ... [illegible] worthy of the companionship.

TUESDAY MORNING, OCTOBER [illegible]

A DEMOCRATIC CIRCULAR.

A circular has been issued by Messrs. [illegible] M. Foy, B. G. Smith, F. M. Rutledge and other democratic gentlemen [illegible] of this state [illegible] to democrats throughout the state [illegible] contributions of money to assist in pushing the democratic campaign. They say the republicans have money and will use it, and though they declare that they don't intend to try to compete with the republicans in the use of money, nevertheless they want all they can get and will put it where it will do most good, so far as it will go.

This is a somewhat remarkable appeal. The authors of it assume that the republicans will have more money for the contest than they can get, and therefore they speak in a deprecatory manner of the use of money in elections, but nevertheless they would be glad if faithful democrats throughout the state would contribute to the "sack" in Portland to offset the sums "illegally wrung from officeholders" for support of the republican cause.

Now we take it that if it is corrupt and wicked to use money on one side, it is quite as much so on the other. Whether or not republican officeholders in Oregon will contribute to a campaign fund we know not, but probably some of them will. It may be suspected that this same democratic finance committee would not be averse to receiving subscriptions from democratic officeholders, if there were any, and if a show of authority could be had would even assess them.

If republican office-holders throughout the country are giving money for the campaign, it is chiefly because they know that if the democratic party shall succeed they will be "bounced," to the last man. If they have stronger desire than other republicans for the success of their party, this is the explanation of it. A similar [illegible] from the Cleveland party that [illegible] it would not follow [illegible] take away the main incentive to [illegible] of the office-holders, of which these democratic [illegible] comp[illegible] But [illegible] such guaranty will be given. The [illegible] they will [illegible] [illegible] campaign the gentlemen of this [illegible] only be assessing the [illegible] of their own party.

[illegible] ROMANCING.

[illegible] necessarily the [illegible] perfect civilization. [illegible] municipality to the [illegible] But [illegible] goes no further [illegible] the Iroquois and Pequots.

Now comes the [illegible] people of Buffalo, in the state of New York, and propose to honor the [illegible] fame of a [illegible] savage named Red Jacket by erecting to his memory a life-size marble statue in one of their public squares. [illegible] A Chicago paper speaks of this forthcoming ceremony as "a tribute to the valor of the Iroquois nation, whose history is as interesting as a romance." That is just exactly the fault of it. All their atrocious butcheries and thefts, which are matters of history, have been glossed over by ingenious writers of fiction until they are simply works of romance and have no semblance of reality about them.

At the same time, it looks bad for an Oregon newspaper to be interfering in a matter which is none of its business. If the good people of Buffalo have got the money to pay for their statue of a stinking and squalid savage who has been dead for more than half a century, let them do it. This extravagance will cost nobody else one dollar. They have got fairly started in the vindication business and we hope they will keep it up. After adorning their parks with statues of Indian robbers and murderers, they can go still further and erect a colossal statue of Judas in one of their principal cemeteries.

This mawkish worship of savage valor is an error into which Pacific coast people are not likely to fall. To begin with they have not the money to squander upon idle romancing, but would prefer to spend it upon some charity bestowed on living people. Before devoting any cash to the purchase of a statue for any of the founders of the old dominion of the Pacific—like Whitman, Meek or Thurston—for instance, the practical good sense of our Pacific coasters would lead them first to look around and ascertain if there were in their midst any deserving people who had just arrived from a long and dangerous journey and suffered such privations as have endeared the names of Meek, Whitman and others to the Oregon heart.

At all events, we know of two towns east of the Cascade range that are surrounded with the elements of prosperity and likely to grow. One of these is Pendleton in this state and the other is Lewiston, in the territory of Idaho. We shall never expect to live long enough to see a marble statue of Nez Perce Joseph in the plaza at Lewiston, nor a graven image of Umapine in the court house square at Pendleton. Our plain Pacific folks know the Indian character too well from their own little experience, and moreover they have better uses for their well earned money.

A good exposition generally pays better the longer it is kept open. The centennial lasted six months, and fought its way up from comparative failure to brilliant success. In June the average daily attendance was 37,000, in July, 34,000, in August, 44,000, in September, [illegible] in October, [illegible] and in November, [illegible]. The average for the entire season was [illegible], the largest that any world's fair has ever had. But the total attendance was not so great as that of the Paris exposition of 1867, which eclipsed all others with 10,200,000 admissions. However, it lasted longer than the centennial, whose total ran up to 9,910,966 admissions. The Vienna exposition ranks third with [illegible]. Next comes the London exposition of 1862, with [illegible]. Close behind in point of attendance, though the pioneer in point of time, comes the London exposition of 1851 with [illegible]. The Paris exposition of 1855 had 5,162,330 admissions.

There is another blast against Cleveland from fourteen of the prominent clergymen of Buffalo, representing all denominations. They speak briefly against his immoralities. The public mind is pretty well made up about this candidate, who was drawn in the lottery of availability. He is a dull, heavy, coarse, musty person who has lived "promiscuously" in clubs, bar rooms and "private" lodgings, so as to have easy access to liquors, loose women and other companionship suited to his low tastes. He has never been decent enough to desire a home, and never has had one, and therefore from every home in the land the ballot should be against him. It is, of course, that the free liquor [illegible] and all their associate [illegible] support him.

When the state republican convention assembled in this city last spring a majority of the delegates were determined to instruct for Blaine, and it howled down all suggestions that it might be well to send uninstructed delegates. Their enthusiasm for Blaine was boundless, and it has become [illegible] But [illegible] has been [illegible] these gentlemen since.

[illegible] Porter [illegible] says: The idea of [illegible] things [illegible] So profound is the idea that it is worth while to state [illegible] original correct [illegible] Shakespeare writes "There is some soul of goodness in things evil." Herbert Spencer [illegible] so profound an idea, though possibly [illegible] phrased and directed to the form expressed [illegible] the Ledger.

Again it is asserted that the charges of immorality against Cleveland cannot be believed on the testimony presented, since "every investigation of the stories leads direct to the brothels." But what would this show except that Cleveland is well known in the brothels? One would hardly expect such investigation to lead to the decent families of Buffalo.

[illegible] ARTISTS.

The [illegible] women [illegible] is held by the shocking [illegible] [illegible] in poetry, [illegible] painting, Ruskin [illegible] [illegible] is strictly in the possession of those gifts which distinguish the poet, the musician and the painter that the inferiority of women is specially marked, for there seems to be a corresponding inferiority in the power to transmit these gifts in the female line. According to the author of Hereditary Genius 94 per cent of those who have attained eminence as poets, and 85 per cent of the eminent artists, have inherited their genius through male lines. With literary and scientific men the showing is much more favorable to women, while in the field of theology the inferiority is reversed—73 per cent of the eminent divines having inherited their talents through female lines.

What makes this exhibit remarkable is that the failure of women has been most conspicuous in just those directions in which they would seem most likely to succeed, both because of their characteristic sensibility to the beautiful and their comparative freedom from social and educational discouragements. They have, indeed, had more encouragement than men to pursue the arts in question as more accomplishments. Statecraft, science, mechanics, have been always thought peculiarly unfitted to their tastes and talents, yet among them have been found some of the world's most eminent sovereigns, to science they can boast at least a few original students who have added to the sample [illegible] of knowledge, while those who read some time ago the North American, the article of Mrs. Gage on the mechanical inventions of women must have been astonished to see how numerous and valuable have been their achievements in this direction. That follow [illegible] making should have been invented by a woman—Barbara [illegible] of Saxony; that Madame Bessun should have lately rediscovered the art of mixing Venetian paint, lost since the thirteenth century; that Chinese women [illegible] the invention of spinning and of the process of manufacturing silk [illegible] surprise, since these arts they are [illegible] by the [illegible] occupations of their sex. But Mrs. Gage has shown that women [illegible] has been recently extended [illegible] inventions, being [illegible] to their traditional sphere. Among these may be mentioned the Burden [illegible] which turns out a complete [illegible] The [illegible] Mrs. Mather and the [illegible] paper bag, for her patents of which Miss Maggie Knight wisely [illegible] Monitor, the Eureka street sweeper, and the Manning & Smith mowers and reapers.

In view of the facts just recited "still the wonder grows" that women who succeed where they would seem fore-doomed to failure should fail where they appear most likely to succeed. Yet the cause of their comparative failure in the artistic directions indicated is by no means an impenetrable mystery. On the contrary it is to be found in the very sensibilities which artists require and which constitute the peculiar endowment of their sex. Not that the sensibilities of women are too great—that were impossible—but they are too limited in their scope and too undisciplined, and they have, consequently, led to capricious weakness rather than to that enduring strength without which high achievements are impossible. The constitution of nature is fatefully forceful, her laws are as inexorable as they are, on the whole, beneficent, and they whose sensibilities are broad as well as keen have a deep personal sympathy with the stern not less than the esthetic aspect of things. When sensibility is a source of weakness and repining when it exaggerates vanity into a vice and provides amusements for brutality, its fault is not in its excess, but in its misdirection. It is not a sensibility to "high objects and enduring things," but to petty and personal occasions of depression or exaltation, to annoyances which are, in their nature, trifling and transient and to ambitions which brook neither disappointment nor delay. Such was not the sensibility of Milton, who was like "a seraph strong" in political and social neglect, in blindness and poverty, nor of Scott, who, to exercise the prosaic virtue of paying his debts under difficulties, deliberately sacrificed his life to what he well knew to be excess of labor, nor of Shelley, who was one of the true believers, if not in all things, a believer in truth, and who, for the truth's sake, as he understood it, calmly braved unrelenting persecution. These men had iron in their blood. "Sprung from the oak and not from the willow," their sensibility was great to great things. But with women of sensibility—even women of genius—the field of the emotions is apt to be too narrow for those sublime impressions which lift the mind out of the region of merely personal feeling into those feelings universal which make the whole world kin. Without doubt this peculiarity of the sex is in part the result of contracted education and surroundings. It may be wholly so, though there are reasons for believing that it is partly nature's stamp upon the female organization. However it originated the fact remains that the sensibilities of women, while keener and more excitable than those of men, are more limited in their scope.

They are also more undisciplined, the keener the feelings the greater the necessity that they should be regulated by a trained understanding. People of undisciplined sensibility always fall into the error of mistaking emotions for forces, they regard them as ends in themselves instead of means to an end, and squander in mere feeling the vital force required for the elaboration of thought. Into this error women of sensibility are more apt to fall than men of the same class, for the reason that they far less often receive that thorough instruction, with its attendant mental discipline, which converts the emotions, from inefficient substitutes for thought, into its efficient allies. Undisciplined emotions confuse the operations of the intellect. It is only when they are curbed by the reason and enlightened by a wide survey of the field of knowledge that they illuminate the understanding and supply, perhaps, a needed stimulus to its highest activities. This being so we ought to expect the failures of women to be most conspicuous in those directions which most demand their characteristic sensibility, for it is this very sensibility which renders especially needful the mental discipline and extensive knowledge in which they are so deficient. And, on the other hand, we ought to expect that the opportunities of advanced education which are now being afforded to women will be attended by a marked advance in their artistic achievements. Of this consummation we have had already some encouraging signs. So excellent has been the painting of some female artists in recent years that Mr. Ruskin, with characteristic sincerity and inconsistency, has publicly withdrawn the disparaging criticism upon the capacity of female painters which he so often expressed in his earlier lectures. And in music, too, a number of women have lately attained to eminence. There are at present in France two distinguished female composers, Mademoiselle Holmes and Madame Grandval. The latter received the Rossini prize at the conservatory of Paris for a [illegible] [illegible] of the eleven votes of the jury which awards the grand prize of ten thousand francs, instituted by the city of Paris for the best symphony with choruses, she received nine. Of the "Lutece," which received the second prize in the latter competition, M. Joncieres, the distinguished musical critic, has said: "It has a [illegible] and a freshness which deserve something more than the trivial praise usually accorded to the works of women composers. It is vigorous, grand and original, and, though there are passages which shock by their boldness, there is a passion and an inspiration through the whole work which charm and lead captive the senses."

It would be an error to assume that all the democrats in Ohio are in favor of a free liquor

[illegible] the [illegible] of the state [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] campaign [illegible] much more effectively than the prohibitionists [illegible]

THE [illegible] COMPLAINT.

The country will remember how severely President Arthur was censured by the independent press of New York for saying how his preference for the nomination of Secretary Folger for governor. He was accused of having belittled his high office by interfering in a political contest, and it was this feeling of resentment that induced thousands of republicans to stay away from the polls, and thus pave the way for Cleveland's success.

Few now think that the president was deserving of the censure cast upon him, but this is a matter of no material consequence now. Governor Cleveland is aspiring to the office now held by Mr. Arthur, and he has pursued a course as governor which leaves no doubt as to how he would act under like circumstances were he president. We refer to his "personal comfort" letter to John Kelly, which raised such a furore when the Tammany boss gave the governor away.

When Cleveland took office the state senate was so evenly divided that the Tammany members held the balance of power. Of these three Thomas F. Grady was most conspicuous, and he was the special friend of John Kelly. Together they gave the governor a great deal of trouble, because without their sanction the executive appointments could not be confirmed. All this was very trying to the patience of the "reform governor," and particularly exasperating to those whom he had marked for fat positions. What was to be done? Grady stood in the way and the governor resolved to have him removed. When election time came round, therefore, his excellency, Oct. 21, 1883, penned the following letter to Kelly:

[illegible]

This was one of the acts which [illegible] Tammany's dislike of Cleveland. It was a frank recognition of the fact that Kelly had the power to make or unmake a senator, and the governor, with chivalrous simplicity, [illegible] the big boss to [illegible] his personal comfort [illegible] of the executive might be duly regarded. If he should gain the presidency and Mr. [illegible] Riddleberger should interfere with his personal comfort, he would not hesitate to use the whole power of the administration to [illegible] the [illegible] of his enemies. There is not the [illegible] in this world, and what's the use of being [illegible] and suffering [illegible] from others who will not do what they are told?

West Virginia may vote to-day. The state is reported very close, and it will count something big if it should go republican. If the democrats get Ohio too, it will get a great deal; if the republicans get both Ohio and West Virginia they will get a great deal more.

Dr. Leonard W. Bacon, who came out as an "independent" some time ago, now declares that his self-respect will not permit him to vote for Cleveland. That motive does not interfere at all, however, in the case of Mr. Beecher.

It is said that the democratic party in Pennsylvania is not discouraged. That probably is because it sees no reason to fear the overthrow of protection.

PASTORAL INSTALLATION AT ASTORIA.

Rev. Dr. E. W. Garner, late of Escanaba, Michigan, but now a member of the Presbytery of Oregon, having accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian church of Astoria, was duly inducted into that office on Sunday evening last, in that city. The church was filled to its utmost capacity, and the pulpit platform was occupied by the Revs. I. H. Condit of Albany, J. V. Milligan of Ashland, Dr. W. Roberts of Astoria, and Chaplain Scott, U. S. A., all of whom took part in the services of the evening. Rev. I. H. Condit, moderator of the Presbytery of Oregon, preached the installation sermon and delivered the charge to the pastor elect. Rev. J. V. Milligan, the former pastor of the church, delivered the charge to the people. An efficient choir, with Miss Flavel as organist, rendered some choice selections appropriate to the occasion, Miss Katie Flavel rendering the beautiful solo, "Consider the Lilies."

The installation sermon by Rev. I. H. Condit was delivered in a very impressive manner, and was most appropriate to the occasion. It was listened to by the large audience with marked attention. The following is but a bare sketch of the discourse. The text was taken from Judges, vi., 14—"Go in this thy might." The sermon was devoted to the consideration of some of the elements of Gideon's strength as a valiant captain of the Lord's host.

1. Gideon was strong because of his humility. He did not over estimate his own strength. To be conscious of weakness when really weak is the first element of strength. Gideon knew the helplessness of Israel's situation as long as Jehovah failed to exert himself on their behalf, and when the angel saluted him he exclaimed in reply, "Wherewith shall I save Israel?"

2. A second element in Gideon's strength was his unwavering faith in God's promise, "Behold, I will be with thee, and thou shalt deliver Israel from the hands of the Midianites." He distinctly apprehended and acted upon the principle contained in those favorite passages of scripture which set forth the indispensable necessity of taking God at his word, and thus utilizing that divine power, without which all human undertaking must surely fail. "If God be for us who can be against us?" "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it. Except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain." "Without me ye can do nothing." "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me." "When I am weak then am I strong."

3. A third and exceedingly important element in Gideon's strength was his consciousness of a divine commission. "Have not I sent thee?" Nothing ennobles and dignifies life more than the consciousness that we have a mission to fulfill, that we have a special work to do and that heaven has sent us. Under such circumstances one feels that his business is the king's business and what can turn him aside, for "the king's business requireth haste." The discourse concluded by considering the important question, Can all men hear the voice of the angel saying, "Have not I sent thee?" "Go in this thy might." All men may know what is their particular commission. God has a particular work for every one. What this is may be ascertained in three ways.

First, Study your own natural qualifications.

2. Consider most seriously the paramount need of society and of the world at large. A man may have superior talents as a musician and as instructor in music, and yet society may have great demands for his services as an upright impartial journalist to mould public sentiment against vice, and all this notwithstanding his natural talents in the latter line may be somewhat inferior to his qualifications for the former calling. There are times on a plantation when the plantation blacksmith must go to the harvest field to meet an emergency, and do more efficient service there than at the anvil.

3. In determining our sphere in life and interpreting the terms of our commission, we must not forget the example of Gideon. He sought through earnest prayer to Jehovah to have his doubts removed. "Show me a sign." pray thee." And so if any man hesitates after having seriously considered his natural qualifications, and the paramount needs of society as indicated by providential openings, let him have recourse to prayer. "If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." And receiving this assurance that he is on the line which providence has marked out for him, he shall hear the voice of the heavenly messenger saying, "Go in this thy might: have not I sent thee?"

During 1883 the roads of Massachusetts carried passengers equal to thirty rides for every inhabitant in the state. In Pennsylvania the average was twelve rides, in New York nine rides, and in Illinois eight. In the south and southwest the average is four and a half rides to each inhabitant, and on the Pacific slope about eight. The average throughout the United States was a little more than six rides per inhabitant.

SENATOR DOLPH AT ROSEBURG.

[illegible] Mr. Dolph's speech [illegible] Monday evening. [illegible] M. F. G. Hirsh, [illegible] president of the Blaine and Logan club, [illegible] words. For two hours Mr. Dolph held the attention of every [illegible] there were [illegible] but a few drunken democrats, who [illegible] distribute [illegible] campaign, every issue at stake, from the personal character of each candidate to the great tariff question, was intelligently and impartially handled. It has been our privilege to hear speeches in this and previous campaigns from the ablest and most gifted orators of each party, but how any farmer or laborer can vote the democratic ticket in the face of the arguments of such able speeches as those of Messrs. George and Dolph is a mystery that may well puzzle the brains of anyone. So strong were Mr. Dolph's arguments, so devoid was his speech of personal abuse and so convincing was every position assumed by him that the few democratic loafers who adorned the walls at or near the door found it necessary to leave the house, or they, too, would be converted and convinced that it was their duty to support the nominees of the republican party for president and vice president. Reports from every precinct in this county are most encouraging, and the efforts of our local central committee in supplying every precinct with at least one good sound campaign speech are commendable.

Mrs. John A. Logan.

Mrs. John A. Logan, who, without regard to her husband's candidacy or to politics, has been one of the most remarkable women in the United States, has joined the general in his [illegible] She spent a number of days in this city recently, until the writer of this met her on the street one afternoon. She was on a [illegible] excursion among the stores, doing [illegible] herself [illegible] "How do you do, Mr. [illegible]" we asked, shaking her cordially [illegible] [illegible] We indeed, shook the lady's hand. It was her pretty face that [illegible] with smiles. [illegible] how about the campaign?" we asked. She is beautiful and will be so long as those [illegible] eyes shall remain unclouded. There is charming history connected with the lives of General and Mrs. Logan, which some body ought to write for publication. They started out together in youth with nothing but mutual affection and a noble purpose between them, and have journeyed the path of life together sweetly and harmoniously—a life that has been full of exciting, and sometimes brilliant incidents and vicissitudes, but always mutually sympathetic, mutually trustful and faithful. Mrs. Logan is proud of her gallant general, and he is equally proud of his bright womanly wife. They are as noble a pair as can be found within the bounds of human wedlock.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS GRAND LODGE.—A number of representatives en route to the grand lodge K. of P. meeting at Albany were in the city last night. Ivanhoe No. 10 was visited by many of them and they were well entertained by short remarks from local and visiting members of the order. Lodges from Astoria, The Dalles, Hillsboro, Glencoe, Albina and East Portland, were present. These with a number of Knights from this city take this morning's train for Albany. The question as to the ... of meeting of the next grand lodge session is already being canvassed. Of course Portland's claim is set forth and there ... for choosing this city. Being central ... and affording the most lodgers, better entertainment could be furnished with less work than of the reception of delegates from seven to ... lodges ... Delegates and visitors will be at Albany from Salem, Ashland, Roseburg and several other points. The session is expected to close Friday of this week.

It seems many foot pads, burglars and other ruffians ... Pilkington should patrol that vicinity with his trusty shot gun for a while.

PROHIBITION SPEAKER.—Hon. Samuel Colver, one of the St. John electors for this state, spoke at the court house last evening to an audience of about fifty persons. He is a gray haired farmer, with a good voice, and speaks earnestly and vigorously against the crime breeding liquor traffic. He fully illustrated the evils growing out of it, and appealed to temperance men to vote their convictions—a vote for a principle is never thrown away. Incidentally he denounced monopolies and upheld the Butler party as being more ... than the old parties to afford the laboring masses relief in the present hard times. Mr. Colver will probably speak in East Portland to-night.

GAME.—F. J. Jeffrey and Co. Curry have returned from a hunting trip to Government island. They report seeing thousands of widgeons but were unable to secure a single specimen. D. Monnastes and W. P. Berger visited Monnastes' farm on Sunday and bagged thirty-six mallards and eighteen snipe. They also saw ... the first reported this season. The latter seems to have brought in the whole list of webfooted birds. Game of all kinds was however scarce in the markets yesterday. A few geese and ducks and a much less number of pheasants than usual, were about all furnished by local hunters, but ten dozen of young prairie chickens were received from Spokane Falls.

MAKING REPAIRS.—Workmen are employed in razing the ruins of Donald Macleay's warehouse at the foot of Alder street. The charred planks and beams are being formed into two huge rafts at the end of the wharf, and will probably be towed away down the river. The damages to Everding & Farrell's and the adjoining store have been thoroughly repaired by new doors, new floors, ceiling and white washing. Even the stove pipe in Everding & Farrell's was whitewashed and the artist would have whitewashed Dick Everding if there had been him enough in the city to have done him any good.

THE FISHING SCHOONER.—A dispatch to THE OREGONIAN from Astoria states that nothing has been heard of the fishing schooner Lottie of the Deep Sea Fishing Co. since she was seen off Shoalwater bay four days ago. It is supposed that she has run around to Neah Bay or Puget sound. Very rough weather has prevailed on the coast from the south for the last day or two, and unless the Lottie has found shelter she may not be afloat. At this rate the supply of fish from this source can only be looked upon as very precarious.

MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.—The Portland Ministerial Association, composed of the city pastors, met yesterday morning at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A. Rev. Dr. H. K. Hines, editor of the Christian Advocate, was chosen president and Rev. George Lee, secretary. A motion was introduced to restrict the membership to evangelical ministers only. After a warm discussion the motion was lost. A committee was then appointed to select an essayist for the next meeting, which will be on the first Monday in November.

ASSIGNMENT.—Chou Chu, a Chinese merchant doing business under the firm name of ... Chung Hong ..., at No. 1 ... Second street, in this city, made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors to Chou Sing. The assets of the bankrupt merchant consist of the stock and fixtures of his store valued at $1500, and book accounts for $150. His liabilities aggregate $4011, divided among ten Chinese and one white firm, Walter Bros. & Co. of San Francisco, who claim $130.

THE FRUITS OF SKILL.—The oldest exhibitor at the Mechanics' fair is Mr. Nat..., who displays a stock of articles turned out of bone and ivory. He is 83 years of age, but still he and his fingers have lost none of their cunning. He has turned out a lot of pretty little ornaments which he sells, some of them useful and all of them cheap. This is his only means of livelihood, and he merits consideration at the hands of those able to buy the fruit of his labors. His exhibit is at the left of the Second street entrance, near the stairway.

DID NOT PAY GOVERNMENT TAX.—Sidney Brown, a saloon keeper of Pendleton, who failed to pay the special tax required by law, was arrested and had an examination before U. S. Commissioner Fred Page-Tustin, who held him to answer in the sum of $ (60). Not being able to furnish bail on such a ... he was brought down here yesterday, and is in the county jail awaiting his trial.

SCHOOL TAXES.—The tax roll for school district No. 1, this county, for 1884, is now in the hands of the clerk, Wm. Church, ... Third and Morrison. The board ... will sit as a board of equalization until Friday of next week, the 24th inst., for the purpose of ... collections.

DECISIONS TO BE ANNOUNCED.—Judge Seneca Smith will announce in the state circuit court this morning his decisions in the following causes now pending: Colver vs. Evans, upon a writ of review, and Ah Wong vs. the firm of Lung Yuen, upon the motion to dissolve the attachment.

EDUCATIONAL CLASSES.—Young men who have not yet availed themselves of the privileges of the educational classes of the Y. M. C. A. will have an opportunity of doing the same this evening, as the classes in German and elocution and gymnastics meet this evening.

HANDS SMASHED.—Yesterday morning George Murphy, employed on a pile driver at government work at the mouth of the Willamette, met with an accident which crippled him for life. He was adjusting a ring on the top of a pile when the rope which held the hammer broke. It came down and caught both hands, crushing them. The steamer Traveler, which happened along, brought him to this city. He went to St. Vincent's hospital, where Dr. Bevan, the marine surgeon, amputated the thumb and three fingers of the right hand and two fingers on the left. The bones in the ... of the hand were all injured.

DEATH OF MISS REED.—Yesterday morning Miss Agnes S. Reed, better known ... to her friends as Miss Kittie Reed, the eldest daughter of the late Judge J. H. Reed, died at the residence of her mother, corner of Jas. Park and Clay streets, of consumption. She had been ill ... a year and at the time of her father's death a few months ago ... Miss Reed was one of the brightest and most attractive young ladies in Portland society. The funeral will take place from Trinity church this afternoon at ... Services ...

A PISTOL SHOT.—An excitement was created at the corner of First and Morrison streets yesterday afternoon by the report of what seemed to be a pistol shot. ...

UNFOUNDED CHARGES.—Mr. ... of ... Oregon, who arrived yesterday, ... charges him with insulting lady passengers on the vessel. He has been steward of the ship ever since she came ... He gives all the ... to any charitable institution in the city if ...

RAILS TO THE FRONT.—The first of the lot of rails for the Baker City branch, which arrived on the ship Clarence S. Bement, started for the front last night. The remainder will be hurried forward without delay. All the bridge work—there are thirty-seven structures in the twenty-two miles along the Burnt river canyon—is well in hand and there is hardly a doubt that the line will be ready to turn over to the operating department within a third days.

NEEDLESS ALARM.—Shortly after midnight an alarm was turned in from box 12 and gathered a great crowd. It was sounded by Policeman Bevers, who saw fire in the Chinese block, corner Second and Yamhill. Only a mattress had caught and this was thrown out of the window. It was thrown out until the policeman had run around the corner to the box.

INCENDIARY GETS FIVE YEARS.—Judge Smith, in the state circuit court, yesterday denied ... F. Becker, convicted of arson, a new trial and sentenced him to imprisonment in the penitentiary for five years. A bill of exceptions will be filed and the case may be appealed.

QUICK TRIP.—The Oregon arrived here at 1:30 yesterday afternoon. She had adverse winds the first day out, but made up the next day. Her last trip to Portland was made in equally quick time, and it seems as if the ... ship was getting faster with age.

WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY

This school has begun the year under most favorable auspices. The roll of students already has reached nearly 200. Young men and women are coming almost full from all parts of the northwest and the school has never had better prospects. Willamette university is most fortunate in its location at Salem, a city remarkable for its beauty. It furnishes more church-going people than any other town in Oregon for its population. The morals of the city are the very best. It is a rare thing to see a drunken man in Salem. The liquor community have just been defeated in an attempt to reduce the city ... license. Mayor Keller casting the deciding vote in the city council against the reduction. Students coming here from a distance are cordially welcomed, not only by the teachers, but by the best society of the city, and their residence here is somewhat a means of culture. Living expenses are very reasonable, this year ... The next term will begin the 10th of November, when many new students are expected.

THE MECHANICS' FAIR.

Everyone has a specialty, although it may not be exactly that from which he gets his bread and butter, and whatever he can find in that line is what he will be sure to describe to his friends when he tells of his visit to the fair. One must not judge from such a one-minded narration what is to be seen, and by the same token, as ... what follows in this article is intended neither as an index nor a ... of the present Mechanics' fair. It is the result of a ... visit and is one of the impressions made hereby in a general way.

Without a doubt all ... citizens who have attended the fair from year to year since its inauguration, six years ago, will concur in the verdict that the present annual exhibition excels any of the previous ones. There may be less ... departments, but there are more and different displays and all seem arranged to the best possible advantage. Two reasons for this success may be given. Energetic business men who have made successes in their own private affairs took hold of these ... association and devoted their whole time to them. The result of their labors speaks for itself. ...

Machinery is always attractive both to mechanics and to those who scarcely know a smokestack from a stopcock. The machinist delights in studying the work of another's hands and the others find enjoyment in wondering what they do not in the least understand. Engines of various descriptions are throbbing with the steam that gives them life and machines that need their motive power, clatter, hum, buzz and whirl on every hand as the force that drives them travels along belt and wheel and shafting, seemingly going nowhere and yet never returning. Here a young man stands at a little scroll saw, shaping toys for the little ones from rough pieces of timber, another is grinding with a perilously swift revolving emery wheel, a large circular saw and not far away the firm machinery goes through its work and shows what it could do if it only had the chance. As one walks up to inspect the massive engine and boiler that furnishes the force for all that has been seen before, there is a sudden rush of wind like a Kansas cyclone and the feet have a sudden feeling of insecurity upon the floor. Everybody but yourself is laughing, and you feel relieved to find that you are only standing in front of a great blower to a blast furnace, which his method is taken to exhibit.

Hark! There goes the ... bell and all rush away. Why, we have done nothing but ... a few exhibits in Machinery hall. Well, the cider press is still one, but knowing its location it will be easy to show it another time.

MILTON'S FIRST NIGHT

... the New Market theater ... Edwin Forrest, whose personation of this great play is considered, by competent judges, to be grand and superb ... Edwin Booth, Barry Sullivan, Lawrence Barrett, John McCullough and Wm. E. Sheridan each present Richelieu with certain modifications suggested by his own conceptions of the creation of the dramatist. Each of these actors' conceptions differs in many non-essential particulars. Each characterization has its relatively strong and weak points, its lights and shadows varying in intensity. Portlanders who have witnessed the Richelieu of Barrett and Sheridan have noted the different conceptions, and the respective merits of the performances. Comparisons in criticising should, as far as practicable, be avoided, but with the impressions still fresh created by these two actors in this great piece, and the witnessing of the performance of Mr. Milton last evening, the temptation to compare proves too strong to resist. Mr. Milton, then, by comparison, ... cannot be established by no other means the ... Mr. Milton last night must be regarded as one subject more or less to criticism. Mr. Milton can hardly be considered as a really great actor, and his acting last evening did not, except in three scenes, reach greatness though it approached greatness. He is an actor of almost unlimited possibilities, and with certainty a brilliant future. He has many advantages, of mind and person—a fine, musical, well modulated voice, good stage presence, and certainly ... talent. ...

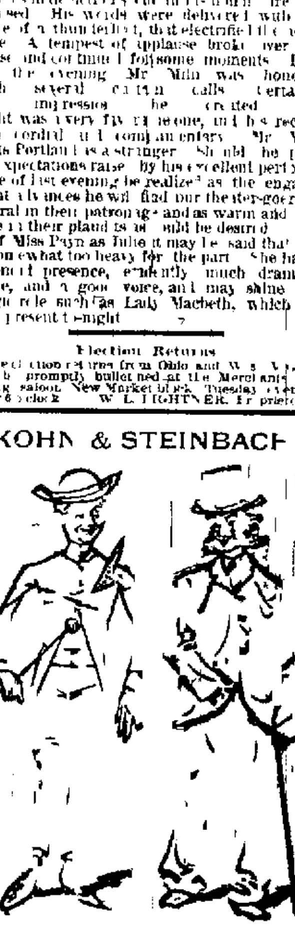

... The scenes were delivered with the force of a thunderbolt, that electrified the audience. A tempest of applause broke over the house and continued for some moments. During the evening Mr. Milton was honored with several curtain calls. Certainly the impression he created last night was a very favorable one, and his reception cordial and complimentary. Mr. Milton's visit to Portland is a stranger. Should he fulfill the expectations raised by his excellent performance of last evening be realized as the engagement advances he will find our theater-goers as liberal in their patronage and as warm and sincere in their plaudits as ... could be desired.

Of Miss Payne as Julie it may be said that she is somewhat too heavy for the part. She has a splendid presence, evidently much dramatic force, and a good voice, and may shine in a tragic role such as Lady Macbeth, which she will present to-night.

NO TRESPASSING.

Harper's Bazar

It was painted in very black letters on a very white board. He who ran could read, and Ruth Bennett was only walking very fast when she came on to it. But she knew it by heart already. For the last month she had read it every day, meekly turned into the dusty road and made the long detour to get past Mr. Hale's ground and into his next neighbor's. Five minutes' walk through that beautiful park would have brought her to Mrs. Alexander's hedge, and saved a modicum of strength and temper needed for her trials as shy governess to the three little Alexanders. But she had never ventured on the liberty, though she wanted to every day, and the impulse had grown greater since she had asked Mrs. Alexander if it was quite impossible.

"There's never a soul about and it's an eighth of a mile certainly to the house. I don't believe any one would ever see me, and if they did I could tell them I was your governess." For it seemed to the young girl a sufficient distinction to be ill at ease Mrs. Rufus Alexander leading lady of the pretty town where her summer home was located.

"I would not venture at it if I were you," Mrs. Alexander answered, kindly. She was always kind to her governess, despite her wealth and her May flower blood and she had a special liking for this bright-faced, eager girl. "Mr. Hale is very particular. He is a newcomer here, and disposed to make every one respect his rights. It had been on the lady's lips to call him parvenu, but she would not throw scorn at her neighbor before her governess.

"Why, Miss Bennett," Harry Alexander had added, "do you know that last summer his gardener ordered my mother off the grounds? Of course Mr. Hale excused it afterward—said the man had his orders to make no discrimination but fancy—my mother!" and Harry's accent was more than words.

Little Miss Bennett bowed her head before the rights of a good democrat why had made all hers money in the last twenty years, and was therefore more aristocratic and exclusive than an English nobleman would have been with respect to his possessions. Half the village would have been grateful had Mr. Hale allowed a footpath to traverse his splendid park. But of course an American could not make concessions to the lower classes, and he stood on his rights and dignities. But to-day Ruth paused. She was late for her lessons, she had lingered to put the last touches to a pretty new dress she wore, and there was a thunderstorm coming on, so run the risk of offending Mrs. Alexander by unsparing her new dress, or should she trespass. No one was in sight as she looked about, and a moment's thunder helped her to a decision. She stepped through the little gate which all those days had mocked her with its invitation to forbidden ground, and hurried across the lawn. In the distance she could see the stately house, the spring, fountains and bright flowers. She kept her eyes on that, fearing some servant on the watch. She never liked the driveway and so, when she came to the other, she started in conscious haste and guilt.

An oversweet, mellow, clear-cut voice said, "I see the new governess."

She looked up. A tall, dark man stood before her, a man whose high features and sensitive mouth Miss Bennett had designed to forbid as had but a touch of repose to them, she was sure. He raised his rather low-crowned hat with a courtesy and a dignity which the young girl felt she could not imitate.

"I am sorry," said Mr. Hale to himself as he watched her flying to the shelter of the park. "Mrs. Alexander's governess!" Ruth? But what the last would not hurt him though the other hardly have told. Perhaps it only reminded him that all his neighbors children would come to the wedding one

"Miss Bennett," Mrs. Alexander said a week later, "where did you meet Mr. Hale? He seems to know you and last night at the garden party he designed to say that if it would save time and fatigue you might go through the park. He has noticed your perhaps, coming up from the village." And when Ruth had told her story she lifted her eyebrows a little. "It's a concession—a great concession from him," she said.

"But I don't want it," cried Ruth. "I'd rather go miles around now. You can't think how his manner humiliates me. I felt as though I'd committed an unpardonable sin."

Mrs. Alexander smiled at her vehemence, but she had her own reasons for not encouraging it. "It's quite on another footing now since he permits it," she said, "and really I wish you would. Since the hot weather came I notice you are very tired with the walk. Anything that will save your strength for your work, you know." And to that Ruth yielded.

She need not have been so fierce about it, she said to herself after a week. She had the park all to herself, and it was certainly pleasanter than the dusty road. At first she hurried through as if a foreign haunt, but gradually moderated her pace and at last she made it a gentle saunter, and even stopped on the brink of the little stream which cross[ed] one end of the park to cool her hot head in its mouth of freshness and soothe her eyes in the soft green depths of the wood beyond. Once or twice she saw Mr. Hale's children with their French nurse in the distance once Mr. Hale himself met her, touched his hat stiffly and stood aside to let her pass. She wondered afterward if he expected her to thank him for his great concession. But the burden of gratitude was most overwhelming to her proud little heart.

But a few days later she met him again, and this time responded enough to give him a very frank smile and greeting. She felt like smiling on all the world that day, the poor little governess, who had no youth and hope for her portion, and was content therewith. Perhaps a letter which she had thrust into her pocket at sight of him—a letter she had herself taken from the office and lingered under the trees to read—had something to do with her radiant face just then.

"You find this way much pleasanter than the road, Miss Bennett?" Mr. Hale said made affable by that smile.

"Very much pleasanter, thank you," Ruth answered demurely.

"It might, perhaps, allow others to go through," he went on, "if I could be sure they would not abuse the liberty. But it is always dangerous to give people an inch; they take an ell instead."

"Oh, I'm no doubt you are quite in the right—from your side of the matter," Ruth answered, and, if there was the faintest touch of irony in her limitation, Mr. Hale did not see it.

"Certainly I am in the right," he declared, in his most magisterial manner, but having thus, so to speak, asserted his dignity, he sought to unbend and be properly gracious to so discreet a person as she has proved herself. Ruth answered all his remarks with proper modesty, deepening the good impression she had already made, and forgot all about him when she crossed the hedge.

But the next day, as she sauntered along the path, a sudden sharp cry startled her—a child's cry for help. It came from the river bank, and as she ran toward it she understood its meaning. The youngest of the children, the little heir of the house, had slipped and fallen into the stream. The nurse was running up and down wringing her hands and the two children were screaming for help. The water was not deep, but a child can drown in a very little, and when she reached the bank he had gone under for the second time.

"Run to the house for help!" she said to the children—but as she spoke she had herself seized the readiest means of aid and was climbing down the bank. It would ruin her dress—even then she thought of that—but she waded bravely in, half supporting herself by clinging to a vine that curtained the slope. It might give way—it certainly would if the boy struggled and she lost her balance—but it was the best she could do. She was not conscious of any special heroism. Other people would doubtless come to pull both out later, but the moments were precious, and the child—here he came up again just out of her reach. She dropped the vine, took the step needed to catch him, and fell with him to the muddy bottom.

Ruth Bennett was chiefly conscious of her ruined dress and mud-bespattered face when, a minute later, she climbed up the bank with her burden. The gardener and coachman were there. Mr. Hale was there, too—but he let the others help her up, and his paternal raptures did not extend to taking his dripping son and heir in his arms.

"Carry him up to the house, Bates," he said, after a glance had assured him that the child was unhurt, "and put him in a bath tub at once. And you, Miss Bennett—"

"I need to go in to one, too," she gasped, trying to wring the water from her skirts. Her ears were roaring with the water in them. She felt as if she had been drowned and come to life again, but it was the second day of the situation which chiefly occupied her even then, and Mr. Hale's divided mind between his wish to be properly grateful and his disgusted sense of her dripping condition. And then, woman-like, as she tried to pick up her dress, with some light remark on its state, she cried instead—

"I—I hope you haven't hurt yourself," Mr. Hale said, evidently not knowing what to say.

"I—I am deeply grateful, Miss Bennett—more than I can express—and I should be very sorry—for any consequences to yourself."

"Oh, it is nothing," Ruth answered as soon as she could speak. "The only consequences to myself are a ruined dress, and that is a proper revenge of fate. It was to save this dress—it was new then and so pretty," she added, pathetically—"the trespassed on your ground six weeks ago. I hope you appreciate the fact of the new dress." And therewith she lifted up the torn and streaming silk to his astonished eyes. "You won't exaggerate my heroism," she went on, "if I tell you that I thought more of this than anything else when I went into the river. I knew there was no danger if I kept a steady head. But I hope the little boy won't take cold; and as that is my only danger just now—" And before Mr. Hale could recover himself to find speech she had swept him a mocking courtesy and was flying toward the Alexander house much as he had seen her speed six weeks before.

"Miss Bennett," Mrs. Alexander said a few days later, coming into the library after the children had gone, "I have a commission to discharge. It is rather a peculiar one, but I hope you will not misunderstand anything through a third person. Of course the situation is peculiar and rather delicate for Mr. Hale to thought between rather put it in my hands—but it is, rather than send out first your—your feeling about it."

Miss Bennett looked up bewildered. "I don't understand, Mrs. Alexander. Is it at the house?"

"Does Mr. Hale want to turn me—" Ruth's lip would not obey her, and she could only blush stiff and say "Curtness—" "What I did? I couldn't take his money, of course."

"I don't know. But he would look at it quite in that light," Mrs. Alexander answered. "Mr. Hale is helped to bring matters to a climax with him. Indeed, he himself as much. Ah! perhaps it is a reward of virtue. Certainly it is quite after the story-book style; but you are pretty enough and bright enough as you are for almost any position. He has said—made mention himself in such a manner as to make me understand that he considers—owes—to you the rescue of his child—and that all his wealth—"

Miss Bennett felt as her senses were flying for flight. "You don't mean—you can't mean," she cried, "that he wants to marry me?"

Mrs. Alexander put her arm gently about the young girl. "I suppose it is rather a rough way to do it. It was to me at first. But after all who should he not? There are the three children, I confess, and he is a few years older, but he is much besides his money to recommend him. But if you could be a splendid home for you, dear. It seems to me he has watched you ever since that time you trespassed. And he has made the courses of it. He began making them some time ago, but I didn't notice. I thought you wanted a governess. Of course I gave you the highest recommendations," she added, laughing, "although I didn't know the last time we wanted one till it came in the shape of a crowning glory to your head."

Miss Bennett sank back into the chair from which she had half risen. Her mind [illegible] could not take in the new situation. But she came to herself with Mrs. Alexander's words.

"Of course, you must have time to think it over. I would like to see you this evening, and—don't you [illegible]?"

"Oh!" Miss Bennett cried, springing to her feet. "There's no use. I couldn't if my life depended on it. I—I'm engaged to some one else. And I never knew—indeed I never knew," Mrs. Alexander, until a few days ago, that Phillip was to be with us. I guess she went on breathlessly, "the sooner we finish school, and that was the way I learned to know him. And Mr. Hale was very angry at his engaging himself to a 'Down-East' schoolma'am as he called me. He had promised to help him before, I—but they quarrelled over pride, and Phillip went West, and I came here. And it was only a fortnight ago that I wrote him, because I didn't much like to write—all about my trespassing in rabbit and [illegible]. And he answered—I had letters last week. That man dragon of a uncle and I know we can come to an understanding, and I know we can come to an understanding, perhaps you can come to. If he learned to know you he might think differently of our engagement, and though I do not need any of his help now and I'm very nearest relative and I should like to be on good terms with him. And I had been hoping—but now—now you also know impossible is. And if Phil has his own way to make, and we may have to wait a long time, and perhaps—I was be poor, I love him too much to mind."

The soul of young love and trust was in her eyes as it looked up at Mrs. Alexander, and the woman's heart in her was touched. It was the philosophy of the ages in the woods, indeed. She could have overturned it with a touch of worldly common sense but she only bent nearer her, and then suddenly Ruth felt a kiss on her forehead, a kiss of a mother's comprehending love.

But when she had cooled a little from this unexpected touch of enthusiasm, Mrs. Alexander had her plans. She met Mr. Hale herself that evening. She confounded him with the news that the school ma'am despised for his nephew was his own eclat and she followed up her advantage till he consented to express his gratitude to Miss Bennett by the gift of a home—of which he should not be master. As [illegible] since young Phillip was doing well at the west, and needed no more of his uncle's help, the new home was [illegible] ready before he could claim its mistress. Only one touch of romance Mr. Hale allowed himself—the wedding gown which replaced Ruth's sun lucky dress.

THE RUSSIAN FORESTS.

How they are Utilized to Manufactures and Commerce.

London Times

Few countries can show a better utilization of forest products than Russia, and particularly in the furnishing of industrial employment to the peasantry. Carriage and cart building forms an important item in wood work giving occupation to at least 500 villages, particularly in the government of Nizni Novgorod Viatka, Kazan, Moscow, Ryasan, Vladimir, Yaroslav, Tula and Kaluga. The annual production in the government of Moscow is 110,000 troubles, the wheel alone in that of Ekaterinburg amounting to the value of 140,000 roubles per annum. It is a singular fact, however, that vehicles rarely are ever finished on the spot where it was begun one village providing the spokes, another the felloes, while a third will make the body. The manufacture of wooden spoons is on a large scale, about 1,500,000 being turned out every year. The same subdivision of labor is seen in this case, one workman cutting the wood into lengths, another shaping the spoon in the rough, a third hollowing it out, and a fourth varnishing it. The spoons are usually made of birch and poplar, or boxwood for the most expensive, the average price per 1000 being four to 8 roubles. Some 250 cubic fathoms of wood are annually cut up into spoons, one cubic fathom making about 1000. They are exported in great numbers via Irbit to Khiva, and via Astrakhan to Persia.

The government of Kazan is noted for producing the majority of the "dega" or yokes which are made of elm and willow. Of these a family that includes three workmen will produce from 700 to 800 in the course of the winter. The frames, however, which are made of birch and maple, come from Kaluga, and are sent to Yaroslav at Kursk. The adder tree yields the dye with which the harness is stained. Combs for weavers are a specialty of a place called Jegorrieffa low, in the government of Ryazan, and are produced at the rate of 5,000,000 a year, the reeds being bought in the south, and the metal-work at Moscow. The spinning-wheels, however, all come from the government of Jaroslav. A place called Sweningrad, in Moscow government, supplies veneered and inlaid furniture and parquets, while Vitaka, Fostroma, Vladimir and Novgorod make the lacquered furniture peculiar to the empire. Tula provides concertinas to the amount of 250,000 per annum, and in Vlatka government are also made organs and violins. In the same locality are grown great numbers of lime trees, the bark of which is turned into bast for matting and sacks, as also for making bast shoes, to the extent of 100,000,000 per annum. The bast matting known as "schang-kala," is imported to England and to supply these industries over half a million lime trees are annually cut down in Vlatka. Paper making is beginning to employ a considerable amount of wood, while of grosser industries the annual production of tar is 2,000,000 poods (one pood equals 36 pounds), of birch oil 100,000 poods, potash 150,000, turpentine oil 60,000, and charcoal 8,000,000.

A German View of the Case

The Allgemeine Zeitung is recognized the world over as the oldest of Germany's political journals. One of the latest issues received here contains the following review of the political situation in the United States:

The present is an exciting time in the United States, floodtide in politics and ebb in trade. The whole attention of the people is directed to the coming presidential campaign. Four candidates are in the field. James G. Blaine, the chosen man of the republican party; Grover Cleveland, the candidate of the democratic party; Benjamin Butler, as leader of the new people's party, and finally St. John, the Prohibitionist candidate. The three first-named are governors of Maine, New York and Massachusetts. Cleveland and Butler have just published their letters of acceptance. That from Cleveland is a statesmanlike document which should be at least the equal of the previously published letter of Blaine. We expected but Cleveland's letter, contrary characteristic, is a spiritless letter of a small man. Not one syllable about the tariff, the important and burning question, instead of making silver coinage, or foreign policy as contained in Cleveland's letter of acceptance a small fuss is thrown in the workingmen to secure their suffrage, and a few glittering phrases on civil service reform are devoted to the independent reformers who have withdrawn themselves from the republican party. At first the name of Cleveland as immigration question the independent reformer [illegible] himself to the educated classes, chiefly got together from Cleveland, the [illegible] republican party because Blaine the candidate of the party, had bad reputation in connection with railway speculations, they set up morals as the order which led them to put the dismal the crash out. But all remarkable proofs are heaped on proofs that Mr. Cleveland, while he was mayor of Buffalo, seduced a beautiful widow by a illegitimate child by her, and then to cover the affair as well as to preserve his good character shot the seduced widow in a hunting [illegible] gunpowder. This of course is pouring oil [illegible] on the fire of the anti-Cleveland press. The entire religious press of the United States is in opposition to Cleveland, while had mounted the standard of morality with the independent reformers, in which Dick or Cleveland and administration is not to vote for the Democrat. For this reason the prospects of the election of Blaine have been considerably bettered.

If we choose an impartisan position in the political [illegible] we must prefer Blaine to Cleveland, for the reason that the latter has not sought to practice personal [illegible] assistance in statesmanship. In European [illegible] long political experience is placed at the bottom of all [illegible] such as Bismarck, Beaconsfield, Gladstone, Cavour and others. During the war of the rebellion, and afterward during the reconstruction of the rebellious states, Blaine played with great tact an important role in congress, being one of the most representative, and as United States senator and speaker in the majority of the much-feared President Garfield. He developed eminent capabilities. His life of [illegible] work. Twenty Years of Congress, is the best [illegible] thoroughly just and impartial history of the late rebellion. As the republican party grew in historical significance and grandeur during the fateful period of the rebellion Blaine rose with it and stands as one of the great statesmen who then were at the helm of the republican party—as Lincoln's president, Seward as adroit minister of finance, a Stanton as [illegible] minister of war, Evarts as secretary of state and diplomat. The latter is known as the idol of the democratic party, a Garfield, the second assassinated president. I will not call it a Blaine assistant secretary of state three years ago on the occasion of the centennial celebration of the surrender of Yorktown showed [illegible] great talent in [illegible] Queen Victoria's Jubilee, who, noblest minister of the American people, was [illegible] Stanton, were present on the invitation of Blaine, the French descendants of Lafayette, who were also invited guests, became [illegible] of the Stanton.

Strange Monster.

Monadnock Observer

We have frequently, for the past seven or eight years, heard different stories told concerning a terrible monster that inhabits a body of water known as Crater Lake, which is situated about fifty miles west of Fort Klamath, Lake County, but at this time and but little attention to it, supposing that it was nothing more than a superstitious mystery circulated only by the native Indians. But since the return of Mr. John Shadduck, who, with others, has seen the monster and is ready to make oath to the truth of his statements, we are now compelled to believe otherwise, and that there is a very huge animal of some kind that inhabits the lake as stated fact. Mr. Shadduck, in describing the animal, says it looked to be as large as [illegible] boats, and was swimming with about two or three feet out of water, and going at a rapid rate, as fast as a man could row a skiff, leaving a similar wave behind it. Its face or head looked white, but although it was a long way off they could plainly see that it was of an immense size. Several shots were fired at it while swimming, but it was so far off that they could not even see where their bullets struck the water. Mr. Chas. Moore, who has visited the lake, says that the cliffs around the lake are from 1500 to 3000 feet above the water and almost perpendicular, rendering only one place that parties can descend to the lake, and when seen a boat distance they look like small children. If this is indeed the case, the animal seen by Shadduck and party must indeed be a huge animal of some kind.

Four hundred millions of tons of freight were transported by the roads of the United States during 1883, the average charge being 1¼ cents per on per mile. The average charge was 7½ cents in New England, 1.04 cents in the middle states, 1.78 cents in the south, 1.23 cents in the western states and 2.29 cents on the Pacific slope.

TWO AMERICAN BEAUTIES.

A Couple of Queens to Whom All Men Bowed.

Mattie Ould of Virginia and Nellie Hazeltine of Missouri. Their Striking Personal Traits.

New York World

There seems to be a sort of penalty for being surpassingly beautiful. Very few women who have become famous by the use of their beauty have lived to a mature age of reasonable contentment and happiness. Probably the most beautiful women known in the country during recent years was Mattie Ould of Virginia. She was not only a gem of transcendent beauty of face, but of wondrously brilliant intellect. Her father, Robert Ould, was famous during the war as the commissioner for the exchange of prisoners on the part of the Confederate government. When a young man he was district attorney for the District of Columbia, and lived in Washington. He was a lawyer of much dignity and probity, but the latter part of his life was clouded by the defeat of the confederacy and the unhappy ending of his daughter's life. Mattie Ould was the bright and shining leader of a coterie of young girls that grew up in Richmond just after the war. They were the last and the most famous representatives of a society of Virginia and the South that now seems to be well-nigh extinct. They were at White Sulphur during the summers of 1872-73 and thereabout. No such assemblages have since been seen there, nor will any like them be seen there or elsewhere again. It was the last brilliant glow of southern chivalry—a something that has now passed into the realms of memory and of worth mainly as a foundation upon which romances of the future may build. For three or four seasons White Sulphur was the rallying place for that limited number of south[illegible] gentlemen and ladies whose fortunes had not been altogether swept away by the war.

The old south had not yet entirely faded away. Many of the opinions and prejudices held before the war were still entertained, the heroism of Jackson, Lee, and hundreds of others was a theme of enthusiastic congratulation, battles were fought anew and victories were won afresh. In this charmed circle, almost closed to people of the north, Mattie Ould was the acknowledged queen. She was the belle of every great ball given at White Sulphur. And she justly won the distinction given her of all the brilliant beautiful women of the sunny south none have been her equal. Her company was sought by every distinguished soldier and statesman. Her presence was like a magic charm to every assemblage. Her voice, look, gesture, movement, everything, she was superlatively attractive. She was the realization to every man of all that he had ever in the wildest stretches of [illegible] imagination pictured a beautiful woman to be. But that full about her head and face and neck and shoulders like a golden cloud, eyes that were great and luminous and appealing, that subdued every beholder such eyes under such a wealth of hair such cheeks of rose tint, full and round a neck of perfect form graceful as the swan's and white and soft as the swan's down—a bosom that rose and fell like the bosom of the sea, and a mouth that could but give the sweet utterance to charm every listener. Her own mother had died when she was a child, and just as she was coming to girlhood her father married his cousin Hume, and between her and her stepmother there arose an inherited [illegible] feud, which ended only with the death of the father, and at no moment when she was piqued and humiliated at some fault would where there ought to have been expressed a kindlier sentiment, she left her home forever, and consented to a marriage more through a feeling of revenge than the prompting of her own heart. No judgment. She made the fatal mistake of marrying a man she did not love, and from the day she went to live under his roof her spirit was broken, and she wilted away like a flower plucked by rude hands. In two years she had died as all [illegible] had to her father, and it was not long till he had followed her, his heart having been completely crushed by the death of his beautiful daughter. In this tragedy there were no swords or pistols, nor was there poison except that poison that comes from bitter words spoken and from a pledge of love wrongfully violated.

A woman who belonged to time still more recent than that of Mattie Ould and who had almost as great fame for her beauty, was Nellie Hazeltine of St. Louis. She too belongs to the society of the south, but not of that kind so distinctive and pronounced as that of which Mattie Ould was so captivating a representative. Nellie Hazeltine was the daughter of a once well-to-do family of St. Louis who had a large and handsome residence on a fashionable part of the city. His daughter was given a good education, and was always regarded as a beautiful girl, but it was not until 1870 and 1871 that she became famous throughout the country. She, like Mattie Ould, adorned her great triumph at White Sulphur Springs, in Virginia, but it was when that summer resort had lost its standing as the temple to southern chivalry and chastity, if there ever was one before. It was while speaking of summer at White Sulphur and Saratoga that the [illegible] originated that Nellie Hazeltine and Sam [illegible] were engaged to be married. While there never was even a shred of truth upon which to found that report, it followed her to her grave and clings to her memory. Nellie Hazeltine and Mattie Ould were both southern types of beauty, but were very different in appearance, manner, and disposition. The former was not so lovable a girl as the latter. If it is, she was not so attractive to men. Mattie Ould was fiery, spontaneous, overwhelming. She had a flow of spirit, of wit, of bright speech that bore down everything and captured every listener. Not that she, brilliant beauty that she was, not lose the warm, bull-faced, overwhelming sun from behind which Nellie Hazeltine had a more faultless face, judged by the classic standard. There was not about it a hint of responsiveness. For an immature girl of her type she would, of the two, have been chosen by some competent to judge. Her head and face and shoulders were of perfect [illegible] according to the rules of the Greek sculptors. There was no [illegible] when she looked at it as though she had just been chiselled out of the marble by the hand of Praxiteles. Putting out of mind the [illegible] milk of her cheeks, one the wealth of brown hair that covered her head. But she was brilliant and versatile also. While she was not to be compared in any way with Mattie Ould she was by no means [illegible] dull, in short she was [illegible] bright, and while she never had as many earnest suitors as Mattie Ould she probably had as many admirers. But her life too was to go out in disappointment. Her father failed in business, and she was left dowerless without the means to maintain her position in society. She came in the [illegible] social circle of the south, with a character of her own, a fixed [illegible] reputation all the [illegible] of the country. In fact she [illegible] was [illegible] to establish [illegible] to those who knew her and knew the facts of the case did not wholly remove the impression that had been created and to escape the disagreeable consequences of a married young man got [illegible] inferior but he need at the time to [illegible] a large fortune. Two years had hardly passed when her money was [illegible] swallowed [illegible], and soon after death [illegible]. The memory of it is yet fresh in the minds of many people, and occurred [illegible] first want. Thus fell on the life of one of the most [illegible] women of America, not distinguished alone because she was beautiful, but because of a bright intellect as well. The disappointing and sincere sorrow of both these famous women are never to be spoken of or written and those who knew them will hold forever a sadness but precious memory of them. The funeral of the one brought tears to the eyes of thousands when they heard the sweet strains of "Under the Daisies"—a song she used to sing—go up from the organ in Grace church, and the grave of the other in beautiful Bellefountain at St. Louis was filled to overflowing with flowers thrown in by the young ladies of that city who had known and loved her when in the prime and beauty of her womanhood. Both died before they reached the age of 25.

There are 17,800 passenger cars in the country, 5640 in baggage, mail and express cars and 750,000 freight cars. Nearly one-fourth of the freight are of 170,000, are owned in Pennsylvania, 100,000 in New York, 88,000 in Ohio, 75,000 in Illinois. Pennsylvania leads in locomotives also, having 3,400, New York, 2,110, Illinois, 2,400, Ohio, 2,200, and Indiana, 1,200. These five states have one-half of all the locomotives in the country.

If the engines, passenger and freight cars of the United States were placed in line they would reach 5400 miles, or form one solid train from New York to San Francisco, with lateral trains reaching from Chicago to St. Paul, to New Orleans and Washington, D. C.

Thousands Hastened to Their Graves

By neglecting or resorting to worthless remedies when attacked by kidney complaints, which could have been cured by the use of Hop Bitters. Many a family might have been saved from sickness, suffering and death, and many a precious life prolonged to a happy old age, by the timely use of this great remedy. Don't wait until you are sick before using Hop Bitters, but if you only feel bad or miserable, use them at once and thus prevent sickness. Better a thousand times prevent than cure. Thousands will testify to this.

Thousands upon Thousands

Of testimonials of the most wonderful cures within the past year from the use of Hop Bitters, many of them from your own neighborhood, should convince the most skeptical that Hop Bitters are the best medicine ever made. We will pay $100 for a case they will not cure or help, when the directions are strictly complied with, and the medicine is not spoiled by drinking poisons. Don't be prejudiced against using them, but try them, and you will be convinced that we tell the truth. Hop Bitters Manufacturing Co., Rochester, N. Y., Toronto, Ont.

A Telling Joke

A physician of Hartford, Conn., in writing to a patient who was complaining of her continued ill health and of inability to sleep, jokingly said: "Try Hop Bitters." The lady took it in earnest and used the Bitters from which she obtained perfect health. She now laughs at the doctor for his joke, but he is not so well pleased with it, as it cost him a good patient.

Use of Doctors

The fees of doctors at $5 a visit would tax a man's purse at the end of a daily visit over $1000 a year for medical attendance alone. A few bottles of Hop Bitters taken in time will save the $100 and all the sickness.

Given up by the Doctors

Is it possible that Mr. Coffey is up and at work and up to his morning [illegible] needs? I assure you it is true. He was [illegible] given up by the doctors, and with no hope but Hop Bitters and only ten days ago his doctor came [illegible] and said he must die from kidney and liver disease.

☞ None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on white label. Shun all the vile poisonous stuff with Hop or Hops in their name.

A VERY PRACTICAL LETTER.

NEW ERA, Or., Oct. 10, 1884.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN:

About a year ago there was a considerable complaint about the Oregon farmers not fully supplying the Portland market with the common farm and garden products, but this year I think the farmers have as good a right to complain of the lack of market.

This one thing is certain, that the farmers of this valley scarcely dare make any effort in that direction, or they find the thing overdone. Of course it is very nice for the consumer when he can buy his potatoes for 40 cents a sack and other things at his own price, but the producer don't feel so comfortable, and when the opposite state of affairs exists his indignation is not severe.

Had Portland a half a million inhabitants and were there large manufactories there with ten thousands of hands, and were they turning out some of the machinery that we send our money away from this coast for, the market would regulate itself and a farmer could calculate when he was planting potatoes a little something of what he would be likely to get for them. A thought here suggests itself that there must be quite a margin in favor of manufacturing those things here, or the shipping across a continent is not a trifle. But the shipper jumps up here and says we have no timber that is fit, and that they have everything in perfect running order and can do it cheaper than we can, and also that the whole machine is patented and they would, to protect themselves, commence suits of injunction against us, etc., and the best we can do is not to bother our heads about machinery, just let them know when we want it. We can hardly help [illegible] of the vessels that come for our wheat [illegible] happy [illegible] if we would [illegible] after I drink a cup of salted coffee [illegible] help thinking that there is a little too much shipping. I have a [illegible] of sheep I want to [illegible] I think that his [illegible] has got to go to Boston and back again, before I get a pair of boots out of it, and when I shear my sheep and [illegible] that the wool would be likely to take a trip east and back before I would see it again, and when the Michigan plow beam broke, because the plow struck an oak root, and when the Connecticut rake handle broke and the Rhode Island hoe handle broke, I thought, and still think, that we are a little off of balance, and what I would like is the job of feeding the people in [illegible] here in our own state while making those things. We have the materials, the ingenuity and enterprise can put into shape. I am using a wheelbarrow that was made in Michigan, and the young man that will begin and make a wheelbarrow here has the field open before him to be in time a millionaire.

Manufacturing is what we want, and what ever will tend toward starting it is the thing we should work for. This business of depending on a market that is half way around the world from us will frequently make us do like we are doing just now—stop and wait for a spell and if creditors and taxes would wait, and our shoes would not wear out it would be all right, but there is where the pinch comes.

A diversity of pursuits is as essential to the well being of a country as a variety of food is essential to the human system.

We well know that a dealer in Portland does not want to buy produce and have it rot on his hands, neither does a farmer wish to grow and have it rot in the fields. To exactly regulate this matter is difficult to do until the consumption can more nearly equal the production than at present. Of course it is to the interest of shippers to not let anything become regulated, as they would like to carry everything across the continent and back for us; yet while tools and shipping are very convenient, it is our duty to ourselves not to allow it to go too far.

CHEHALIS NOTES.

CHEHALIS, Oct. 1[illegible]

Ladies are taking quite an active part in politics.

Lawrence, the blind man, was here last week.

John Dobson is erecting a large pork packing establishment.

Mrs Captain J. Berry is visiting her daughter, Mrs T. Dobson at Hillsboro.

Rev J. R. Thompson of Olympia preached here morning and evening yesterday.

Phil Kearney Post, G. A. R., will meet at Winlock one week from next Friday.

Wadhams & Elliott's men are taking advantage of the freshet and are driving logs.

Hon C. Crosby has been nominated by the republicans for joint councilor for the counties of Lewis and Thurston.

Messrs Coffman & Allen, the loan and exchange brokers who recently located here, are doing a good business.

Mrs Mattie A. Bridges, the adopted daughter of Odd Fellowship, will lecture in the Presbyterian church this evening.

The county commissioners of this county have offered a reward of $500 for the arrest and delivery to the sheriff of the two persons suspected of the murder of August Pickler, on August [illegible]

The citizens of the Chehalis valley would like for Oregon congressmen to lend their assistance in getting the Chehalis river cleared of all drift and having a mail route established along said river.

On last Thursday night Hon Charles S. Voorhees, the fusion nominee for delegate to congress, spoke to a large audience in the court house. He was well received and repeatedly cheered. It will be a close race in this county between the two nominees.

As the election takes place on this territory Nov. 4, wire pulling and handshaking is the order of the day. Two tickets are now in the field, and there is a call for a people's convention next Saturday. This gives the candidates on the two tickets already nominated considerable anxiety.

Some rich mines have been discovered in the eastern portion of this county. Some fine specimens of silver bearing quartz were brought to The Nugget office by G. M. Carnock, who stated that the quartz had been assayed, and found to yield from $1000 to $1300 to the ton. A bed of anthracite coal was also found. Owing to the depth of the snow Mr. Carnock was unable to remain longer in the mountains.

REFORMING BAD BOYS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN

Permit me to submit the following suggestions to the consideration of the philanthropic and benevolent people of our young and growing state through the columns of your daily. This letter is suggested by the timely communication of Rev. T. L. Eliot in your issue of October 9, on "The Reform School Question." The subject deserves the careful consideration of all parties interested in the earthly future of what are called our "bad boys." Bad boys there are, doubtless, but they are "chips of the old block;" they are flesh of our flesh, bone of our bone, blood of our blood, members of our households, and generally speaking they are what we have made them. They show the moulding of our hands, and pose before the world as exponents of our parental wisdom or folly. Their moral qualities as wrought out in their daily lives constitute a symptom not so much of any especial depravity that may be burned, whipped or crushed out, but they should be regarded as the rank buddings of native forces that by right education may grow to an efficient, forceful heritage of serviceable manhood which shall yield to the state large returns of creditable revenue. These "bad boys," so called, are not yet a criminal or hopeless class. On the contrary, they are "jewels in the rough," and any movement looking to their reform must be inspired and modified by this rational and hopeful view or it must be largely a failure.

Of course the home is God's school for childhood and youth, because it is, when normal, pervaded by the plastic influences of motherhood, which is the nearest approximation to Godhood our earth possesses. Many children have never known the blessings of motherhood. To many have come only the most unfortunate and unhappy apology for a home. Paternity and maternity in all their varieties of weakness and viciousness have been and still are the prolific fountain whence flow forth these streams of unfortunately constituted or still more unfortunately distorted or uneducated boys those that we call bad boys all zones of the human family produce them—the ignorant and the cultured, the religious and the non religious.

In my position as chaplain in this city and St. Louis for years past, I have had my views and feelings greatly modified concerning these so-called bad boys, both as to their viciousness or depravity, and the treatment due to them, and I am fully of the opinion that it will be a mistake for us as philanthropists to introduce the reform school system into our state. Whenever we put officially the brand of criminal on a boy or girl, we jeopardize the best instinct of the soul, viz, self respect, and place in the relentless hand of memory a knotted whip that will scourge an [illegible] inner consciousness beyond all the proportions that justice can demand or mercy approve. We may also turn to gall and acridness the milk of human nature, which needs rather the alchemy that shall sweeten it and make it tributary to the great stream of healthful manhood that shall enrich the state by its crowning functions of fatherhood or motherhood.

Consider well that whatever we do for those "bad boys" will exert an influence on their yet unborn boys and girls, and we may yet unwittingly handicap the coming generation of innocents with serious disabilities if we taint their blood and stain their escutcheons by the reform school virus, whether it be from the hybrid or the full-blooded institution, the penitentiary.

From the foregoing remarks it will be readily perceived that this letter is written with the conviction that the technical "reform school" is not a success; that it is not in harmony with the genius of our national ideas of manhood, and therefore does not and will not return the best results to the state. Its merely legal methods tend to produce cunning or unprincipled smartness, or its opposite, a cringing servility, and thus yield a harvest of rogues and eye-servants, rather than of men actuated by the sentiments of self respect and honor.

All boys are in posse bad boys, but they are not in esse criminals. However, attenuated this gossamer distinction between these classes, it nevertheless demarcates between those who may be and those who are, by sentence of law, criminals. Any parent may say to his son "I once was a bad boy," without disgracing himself, but no man can say to his child, I once was a criminal, without inflicting pain and causing the cheeks to mantle.

We must keep steadily before us the fact that our aim is to prevent bad boys from becoming criminals by enlisting their own individual co-operation, on lines congenial to their own preferences or choices of vocation.

Ancestral entail accounts largely for what we designate the freaks, the wilfulness or moral insensibility of these so-called "bad boys." Among those who raise the different classes of animals this fact is admitted, and constitutes their legitimate and invariable data in their efforts to improve stock. Bad boys are stock of the genus homo—untrained, untamed, and often uncurled. Not necessarily ignorant, doltish, idiotic or vicious, but uneducated. They may be school taught, but still uneducated. Their school acquirements often make them a more difficult and dangerous class to manage. Their knowledge is not only power, it is powder. It induces contempt for their less-lettered parents, with or without it they scheme through their life's spring time without labor, and deaden their souls to all sense of shame in view of their parasitical existence.

So far as my contact with these boys allows me to speak, after a quarter of a century of ministerial life, and about ten years of service as chaplain, I may say that in the veins of a large percentage of them there tingles the adventurous blood of our sea-king ancestry. Hence comes their aversion ... [illegible] ... to the preachments of goody-goody people whose phlegmatic or evenly balanced natures have [illegible] which course through their veins.

As a rule stories of wild adventures on land or sea ... [illegible] ... is found in dime novels, the Police Gazette and such papers ... [illegible] ... —possess them ... [illegible] ... Applications are constantly being made to me by and in behalf of these boys to get them berths on ships. At the same time, because these lads are overlooked, our merchant and naval marine is passing into the hands of foreigners or men of immediate foreign parentage. Danes, Swedes, Fins, Germans, Greeks, Austrians, English and a small percentage of native Americans constitute the bulk of the 300,000 seamen who sail under the United States flag.

This marked propensity of so many of these boys and the needs of our marine service perhaps suggest our duty to furnish an industrial school ship, where may be sent by guardians and parents the boys they do not wisely manage or practically educate for departments for which their conduct calls or they show a preference or possess an aptitude.

They need not be put on board as criminals, nor necessarily as bad boys, but as idlers or truants, or as disobedient to their parents. Neither is it necessary that all should be sent on board under sentence of the municipal or state laws, but if necessary, by arrangement with the board of health, or with the prospect of such sentence. If these suggestions receive sufficient favor to be discussed the details of the work will suggest themselves and can be easily supplied. Such a ship as Mount Washington, now offered for sale in this port, would answer to make the experiment, and there are several excellent shipmasters resident in our city, whose services the city or state could probably secure. If the experiment should prove a failure, which I do not consider probable, the vessel could be sold with but little loss to the state.

WANT TO REJOICE OVER OHIO

The following circular, gotten out with an electric pen, was mailed to several of the faithful yesterday:

ROOMS OF THE NORTH PORTLAND CLEVELAND AND HENDRICKS CLUB, PORTLAND, OCT. 13, 1884.

Dear Sir—We have perfected arrangements to receive election returns from Ohio, at our rooms, No. 27 First street, commencing at about 6 o'clock on the evening of the 14th.

You are respectfully invited to be on hand, so that if by an extraordinary piece of good luck the news should be favorable, we can rejoice together.

THE BOARD OF TRADE.

Discussion over the Discrimination by the Northern Pacific

New Committees Appointed for the Year—The Same Old Trouble about Bar Pilots—Collection of Statistics

A regular monthly meeting of the Portland board of trade was held at their chambers last evening, President Donald Macleay in the chair.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

On motion Messrs. Ditterhoefer, Haas & Co., H. Wolf & Bros., John Reid and W. S. Mason were unanimously elected to membership in the board.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Henry Hewett, calling attention to the fact that some ships had been taken down river drawing much less water than others, thereby causing heavy loss to the owners, and intimating that it was of little use to spend money in dredging the river if pilots are to be allowed to fix the draught of ships at any figure they fancy, referred to the committee on navigation.

From H. P. Gregory & Co. and John Clarke, tendering their resignation as members of the board, referred to the committee on membership.

From G. A. Worth and C. F. Pfluger, giving the board advice as to how to run an emigration bureau, and expressing a willingness to take hold of the undertaking and give the board the benefit of their knowledge and experience in this matter for a suitable compensation. Laid on the table.

THE RAILROAD DISCRIMINATION.

Mr. Dodd brought up the subject of the failure of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to fulfill its contracts with the merchants of this city. He alluded to the special rate made on grain, which is not less than from fifteen to eighteen cents per bushel in favor of Minneapolis over Portland, which is a matter of great importance to us. He said: "Portland has fulfilled her contracts with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and we want to know why there should be a failure on their part. The quicker an understanding was reached on this matter the better. Agricultural implement dealers had claims at Cheney, Sprague and Spokane, amounting to $50,000 which they wished to collect. There was a good deal of wheat there, but they could not take it."

Mr. Arnold said he had been expecting this matter to come up, thought it was hardly worth while to enter into the discussion of it to-night; had better hold a special meeting for the purpose.

Mr. Dodd approved the idea and moved that a special committee be appointed to gather the facts in the case and present them at the special meeting.

The motion was carried and President Macleay appointed as such committee Messrs. C. H. Dodd, C. H. Lewis and J. Lowenberg.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

President Macleay announced the following standing committees for 1884-85:

Arbitration—J. Laidlaw, Frank Dekum, Geo. Taylor, Jr., M. S. Burrell, H. A. Elliott.

Finance—James Steel, Wm. Kapus, P. C. Schuyler.

Legislation—D. P. Thompson, C. H. Dodd, Ellis G. Hughes, H. W. Corbett, Wm. M. Ladd.

Statistics—W. J. Burns, Edward Failing, Kenneth Macleay.

Trade and Commerce—W. S. Sibson, T. A. Davis, E. D. McKee.

Navigation—Capt. George H. Flanders, C. P. Church, Capt. N. Ingersoll, C. Caesar, Arthur Wilson.

Membership—C. H. Dodd, Sol Hirsch, A. H. Johnson.

Railroads—W. S. Ladd, C. H. Prescott, R. Koehler, J. B. Montgomery, Wm. B. Honeyman.

Meteorological—Dr. Geo. H. Atkinson, I. H. Page, Geo. H. Himes.

THE PILOTING TROUBLE AGAIN.

The matter of the election of a pilot commissioner came up for consideration. Mr. Laidlaw said there was no use in electing a pilot commissioner. Our law was totally inoperative. There is not a single Oregon pilot on the bar. All the pilots are employed by the tugs and are charging Washington territory prices, but the idea that the pilots charged these rates was merely figurative, as he does not get them. Parties here interested in the tug get them. He would move that the navigation committee be instructed to look into the matter and see whether the Oregon law cannot be put in force on the bar.

Mr. Dodd said the law was framed by the board. It all hinged on one little vessel, the J. C. Cousins. The law granted her peculiar privileges. She was lost, and the moment she was gone our law went with her. We cannot send out a pilot to-day. He cannot go on the tug and there is no vessel to take him. Therefore the Washington Territory man comes in under his law and charges $8 or $10. There is no way to fix the matter except to make the Pilot Commissioners collectors of pilotage. We must have a new law at the next meeting of the legislature.

The motion of Mr. Laidlaw was put and carried.

After some discussion as to the advisability of electing a Pilot Commission, it was agreed to proceed with the election, and Captain Nathaniel Ingersoll was unanimously elected for a term of three years.

STOPPING STATISTICS.

Mr. Taylor called attention to the action of the last meeting in stopping the expenditure for statistical information. He spoke of the importance of the statistics furnished by the Merchants' Exchange, and their completeness and reliability, and said that if this expenditure was stopped the Exchange would have to be removed to its old quarters and would give up collecting these statistics, and when the Board wanted them it would cost more than $500 to get them.

Mr. Laidlaw also spoke of the importance of the statistics furnished by the merchants' exchange and said it would be impossible to get them elsewhere so good or so cheap.

Mr. Dekum suggested that the assistant secretary be dispensed with and his salary paid for the statistics, as if they were furnished by the exchange what need was there for an assistant secretary.

President Macleay stated that there was a great deal of correspondence to be answered; that he gave as much time as he could afford to the business of the board and he must have some one to write letters.

On motion the vote of last meeting stopping the expenditure for statistical information, was reconsidered.

On motion it was ordered that the taking of statistics from the merchants' exchange be continued for one month at the usual figure.

Messrs. Taylor, Schuyler and Mason, were appointed a special committee on statistics. Adjourned.

SEVERAL QUESTIONS ANSWERED

PORTLAND, Oct. 12.

Mr. Editor: If you please,

What is this world come to? do you know? this is what was on my mind, when after asking the question, do you keep all the Children that are sent here, the answer was this, we keep all that pay, it is only the unfortunates who have no Father or Mother who are cast upon the world alone and friendless they are the ones that are turned away to shift for themselves. Poor Children and is this what your Orphan Assilum was built for? for a bording house, or was it built for the poor friendless little waifs who are cast upon the world alone, alone how much sufficience in the world. now let me advis shall the helpless ones go uncared for, so as to enrich the coffers of those set to take care of them. shal the homeless and helpless be sent away to make place for thos who can pay? I think that these Charitable Institutions ought to be looked into.

F. L.

[The above came to THE OREGONIAN just as printed and is anonymous. Of course the coward was afraid to sign his name, but it is published to show the ignorance and viciousness of some people, and how they would like to attack a worthy institution at the same time concealing themselves from gaze. The chances are ten to one that "F. L." is a drunken father who spends most of his money for whisky and has refused to pay $ a week for the support of his child at The Home. It ought to be mentioned right here that The Home is a private charity conducted by the Ladies' Relief society of this city. It is not strictly an orphan asylum and has not [illegible] ... is always crowded ... [illegible] ... It will be received and cared for ... The ... are surprised and often indignant when questioned as to their ability to pay for schools ... [illegible]

and includes board, clothing, medical attendance and medicines, indeed all the necessaries of life, and once in a while luxuries. No estimate is made for the moral training, the kindness and the love with which the children are blessed. On these a money price cannot be fixed.

No worthy application is refused so long as there is room for a child, and the advisory board very properly take upon themselves the right to decide who are worthy and who unworthy. If mistakes are ever made they are not against the deserving. Children for whom board is paid are the exception, not the rule, and the institution has cared for four charity children to every one which helped to bear the expense.]

Y. M. C. A. CONVENTION

Addresses of Welcome Last Night at the Association Rooms—Programme for To-Day

Delegates from abroad to the Y. M. C. A. convention began to arrive early in the afternoon, and were met at the various places of arrival by association workers, who wore neat badges of welcome and escorted to the rooms, where they were welcomed by the general secretary and assigned homes during their sojourn in the city. While the delegates were busily engaged in conversation in the parlors, the ladies with their wonted and characteristic generosity were busily at work preparing refreshments. The delegates were asked to repair to two of the rooms where there were awaiting two large tables well filled with the good things of this life. The tables were soon filled and after a delightful repast one of the delegates, in a few very appropriate remarks, tendered to the ladies of the auxiliary committee their warmest thanks for the collation so hospitably served.

At 8 o'clock the delegates, association members and friends gathered in the chapel for a meeting of welcome to the visiting delegates. The address of welcome by President H. M. Clinton, on behalf of the association, was delivered in the earnest and easy style characteristic of that gentleman. The remarks of the Rev. Dr. Atkinson on behalf of the churches, were of their usual cheerful and urgent strain. Remarks were next made by Prof. R. K. Warren of welcome on behalf of the citizens, after which a response in behalf of the delegates was made by Mr. F. C. Holden, president of the Astoria association.
